Triumph Hailed

Johnson Sees Moon Photos

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Johnson hailed Saturday the Ranger 7 triumph in close-up photography of the moon and said that in space this nation "has achieved fully the leadership we have sought for free men."

He called the Ranger exploit a "historic extension of man's knowledge" and tied it into a plea for peaceful scientific progress.

The President also assented to scientists' reports that the Ranger feat confirms the feasibility of manned moon landings, hopefully within the 1960s.

At a White House briefing in which some of Ranger's pictures of the lunar surface were examined and explained, Johnson received—and obviously accepted—assurances that:

—There are many lunar areas on which manned landings appear possible.

—The Apollo spacecraft design meets the requirement for such landings.

The President was advised also that the Ranger success fires new hope that the late President John F. Kennedy's goal of a manned lunar landing in this decade can be achieved.

"Are you hopeful that you can stay on schedule?" Johnson asked.

"I am hopeful," replied Homer E. Newell, associate administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

"The Ranger photographs provide reassurance that the design range in the LEM (the Lunar Excursion Module, that part of the Apollo spacecraft in which two crew members will leave the mother ship and descend to the moon) is sufficient to take into account the landing difficulties that will be encountered," Newell added.

Newwell and William H. Pickering, director of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, Pasadena, Calif., showed Johnson and White House staff members, on a screen, enlargements of the striking Ranger moon pictures.

Possibilities From Success Of Moon Shot

Quick Changes In Present Defense Position Unlikely

WASHINGTON (AP) — The complete success of the Ranger 7 moon close-up photography experiment poses intriguing possibilities for earthly operations of the military, especially in what can be called instant reconnaissance.

But the moon feat seems unlikely to bring any quick change in the present Defense Department position against operational bases in space.

One of the major requirements in today's ballistic missile warfare plans is "poststrike reconnaissance"—the need to know quickly and in detail the effectiveness of an attack on such a target as an enemy missile-launching site.

A missile-mounted video camera system which can flash back instantly pictures of areas as small as 60 to 100 feet obviously would be a useful tool in a poststrike reconnaissance system.

U. S. military men, studying the results of the Ranger 7 program, are by no means of the belief that the technique used for the moon survey could replace the time-tried reconnaissance systems already in operation. Data obtained by manned aircraft provide a wealth of information. So do the Samos satellite reconnaissance vehicles which the U. S. Air Force puts in orbit in a continuing stream to scan the earth's surface.

But both have disadvantages as well as advantages.

Manned reconnaissance planes may find difficulty in penetrating a heavily defended area.

Photographs made from 100 miles up by a Samos satellite could not match pictures made at an altitude of 1,000 feet — as was done by Ranger 7 in the last seconds of its fall toward the moon's surface.

Among obvious complications in using a camera-television transmission system mounted in a missile for reconnaissance purposes would be in transmitting the photographs back from a target in the Soviet Union Strategic Air Command headquarters in the United States.

Who to Call For Weed Relief

Any Sedalian interested in having overgrown weeds and vegetation cut on their neighbor's property before Missouri State Fair Week should, by protocol, first request relief from their ward councilman. The latter then would communicate with the Sanitary department, not the Street and Alley Department, for action.

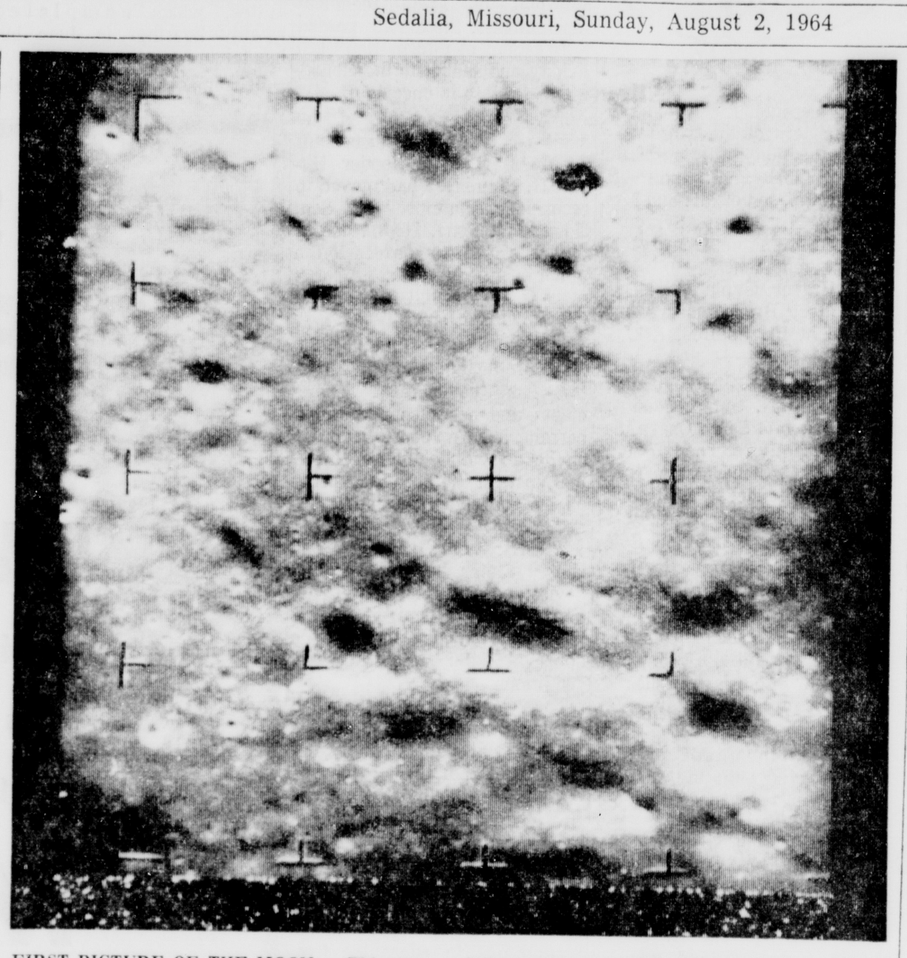

For convenience of those agonized because of the weed problem, here are the names and telephone numbers of city councilmen:

First Ward — Robert Bader. Phone TA 6-2213. James Askren. Phone TA 6-3975.

Fourth Ward — J. C. Griffin. Phone TA 6-4027. Floyd Priddy. Phone TA 7-0068.

FIRST PICTURE OF THE MOON — This was one of the first pictures of the moon by Ranger 7 released at Jet Propulsion Laboratories in Pasadena, Calif. Picture, taken from about three miles, or about 16,000 feet from moon's surface, shows numerous craters. Some Sedalians who viewed the photos here Saturday said the surface of the moon looked like a cracker, others had the opinion it appeared to be a dust-laden planet. Three other pictures appear on page 4 of this section.

Primary Election Tuesday

Keen Interest Over State In Bush And Hearnes Duel

ST. LOUIS (AP)—All Missouri will be watching Tuesday the bitter race between Secretary of State Warren E. Hearnes and Lt. Gov. Hilary A. Bush for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

The ballot listing all candidates in Tuesday's primary will be found on Page 4 of the second section of today's edition.

Both Bush and Hearnes have campaigned throughout the state since announcing their candidacies 20 months ago.

Interest is running so high that Hearnes, the state's chief election official, has estimated more than 800,000 residents will vote. Of these, 600,000 are expected to mark the Democratic ballot.

Observers agree that the outcome of the race now is a toss-up. Hearnes is expected to run well in his native southeastern Missouri. Bush is from Kansas City and is expected to garner a majority of that area's votes.

Outstate Missouri and the St. Louis area could swing either way, observers note. No one is making predictions—except the candidates and their supporters, of course.

As usual, the outcome of the Democratic gubernatorial race will be decided by the voters in the municipal areas of the state. These areas, including the city of St. Louis and St. Louis and Jackson (Kansas City) counties, contained about 50 per cent of the Democratic vote cast in the 1960 primary election.

Roughly 38 per cent of the state's Democratic vote will from metropolitan St. Louis where observers assess Bush's and Hearnes' strength as about equal.

Both have support from 14 of St. Louis' 28 regular Democratic ward organizations. Bush's support includes that of six of the eight Negro wards.

Bush claims endorsements from nine and one-half of the county's regular township organizations, saying his opponent is supported by the remaining six and one-half townships.

However, Hearnes claims support from seven regular township organizations, giving six to Bush and says the remaining three are split. It should be noted that the county organizations are not the so-called "delivery wards" that abound in city.

Rump organizations have been formed in most city wards and county townships to support the candidate who did not receive the regular committee endorsement.

Most rump organizations also are running candidates for committeemen and committeewomen against those incumbents who did not endorse the "right" candidate.

The Bush-Hearnes campaign has caused a deep party division throughout the state. In many St. Louis wards, for instance, young politicians supporting Hearnes have inspired a growing move against the "Old Guard," a political group that has virtually ruled and dominated Democratic politics in this predominantly Democratic city for years.

The "Old Guard" is part of the so-called "Establishment" that Hearnes says controls Bush and most regular Democratic organizations in the state.

The "Old Guard" is headed by Mayor Raymond R. Tucker and City Treasurer John J. Dwyer, long-time Fourth Ward committeeman and chairman of the City Central Democratic Committee.

Dwyer is involved in what is expected to be a close race against challenger Arthur Kennedy, who heads a rump organization endorsing Hearnes. It is another example of the intra-party rift caused by the Bush-Hearnes fight.

Brick Plant Strike Settled In Mexico Area

MEXICO, Mo. (AP)—A strike that idled three brick plants in this area was reported to have been settled late Saturday.

Bob Baysinger, secretary of Local 660, United Brick and Clay Workers of America, said the union had received word from Pittsburgh, Pa., where the seven fire brick companies and the International headquarters of the union were in negotiations.

Baysinger said terms of the settlement were not announced. Earlier it had been reported negotiations broke down over wages, vacations and fringe benefits.

Union sources said the plants would go back on regular schedules Sunday, with most of the workers returning Monday.

The Weather

Fair except for some afternoon cloudiness through Monday. Continued hot and humid. High Sunday in upper 90s. Low Sunday night in low to middle 70s.

Mars Selected For Next Space Target

Launching Of Payloads Set For Early October

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — Next space target for U. S. television cameras will be Mars — believed by most scientists to be the only planet besides earth which might possibly harbor life.

Encouraged by the successful picture - taking mission of Ranger 7, officials of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory plan to launch two identical 570-pound payloads toward Mars during a favorable 28-day period starting in late October.

JPL also was responsible for the success of Ranger 7 and the Mariner 2 probe which relayed the first close-up scientific information on Venus during a fly-by in 1962.

The Mars explorers, Mariners 3 and 4, will have much more difficult assignments than Ranger 7 or Mariner 2.

They must survive eight months in the hostile space environment and then gather essential data during a swift 20-minute fly-by of Mars next June or July. They are to pass within 13,500 miles of the planet.

The camera on each Mariner is to take 20 pictures. Because of communications limitations at that distance, more than 66 million miles, the television pictures will be stored on magnetic tape within the spacecraft and relayed to earth at the rate of one a day.

In order to achieve a near-rendezvous with Mars, each Mariner vehicle must fly a great arcing path or more than 350 million miles, requiring 230 to 260 days depending on the launch date. Mariner 2 covered 224 million miles in 3½ months to encounter Veinus when it was 54 million miles from earth. Ranger 7 traveled 243,665 miles in 68½ hours to hit the moon at a point 228,686 miles away.

The circuitous routes are necessary because the payloads must be aimed in front of the fast-moving planet—much like a hunter aims at a flying bird—to achieve the proper intercept at times when the targets make near-approaches to earth.

In addition to television cameras, Mariners 3 and 4 will carry instruments to measure magnetic fields, iosmic dust, radiation and other space phenomena along the route and nithe vicinity of Mars.

Suit Against Police

ST. LOUIS (AP) — James L. DeFord of Las Vegas, Nev. filed a suit Saturday in St. Louis County Court against the police department.

DeFord said in the suit that $4,000 was taken from him when he was arrested by St. Louis police last Tuesday at a St. Louis hotel. He said he wanted the money returned to him. DeFord named Police Chief Curtis Brostron and the board of police commissioners as defendants.

Police records show DeFord was arrested at the request of suburban Brentwood police as a burglary suspect. DeFord was charged with burglary and released on $3,000 bond.

Search On For Country Music Star

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The big names of country music discarded their fancy clothes and took to the wooded hills south of Nashville Saturday in search of singer Jim Reeves, missing aboard a plane feared to have crashed.

With Reeves, 39, on the light plane, last reported about 5:30 p.m. Friday when a thunderstorm hit the area, was his road manager and piano player, Dean Manuel, 30.

They were returning from a business trip to Batesville, Ark., when the craft disappeared from the radar screen at the Nashville Airport.

Many artists who headquarter in Nashville live in the Brentwood area, where the search centered. As the word spread, they donned their old clothes and joined hundreds of others in the hunt.

Marty Robbins, a star of the Grand Ole Opry, said he was washing his hair when the rain began. In jest, he ran outside to rinse his hair, and heard what sounded like a crash.

"Somebody's been killed out there," he told his wife.

Numerous other residents reported hearing a low-flying plane.

Guitarist Chet Atkins and singers Eddie Arnold, Stonewall Jackson, Ernest Tubb and others famous in the country music field, along with the lesser-known sidemen, joined the search. Some hunted throughout the night.

Goes Wrong Direction

PITTSBURG, Kan. (AP) — Martin Bolin, 8, visiting his grandfather near here, decided Saturday to walk home to Sunflower Village, Kansas.

The walk, which would have required a trip of about 100 miles, started about noon. And it started without Martin telling anyone.

He started walking north but was found by sheriff's deputies about 3 p.m. in the 500 block on East Wuincy in Pittsburg, about three miles along his way—but headed east instead of north.

Before he was found appeals had been made over radio alerting people in the area to be on the lookout for the boy.

Friends Missing At Meet

Some Southerners Have Divorced Johnson Ticket

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sixty of 129 Democratic members of Congress from 13 Southern and border states expect to participate when their party nominates President Johnson Aug. 26. But some of his old friends will be missing.

Since the passage of the civil rights bill, the nomination of Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona by the Republicans and racial rioting in Northern cities, there has been a trend among some Southern office holders to divorce themselves from the Johnson ticket in seeking re-election.

How extensive this movement is and how it will affect the outcome of the battle between Johnson and Goldwater for Southern electoral votes is yet to be demonstrated.

The fact remains that 13 states which will send 1,383 delegates and alternates to cast 585 votes at the Atlantic City, N.J., convention chose only 60 Senate and House members in their delegations, five of them alternates unlikely to vote at all.

Democrats loyal to the national party ticket say this is about par for the course. But dissidents dispute this and note that Alabama and Mississippi have delegations without any representation from Democratic members of the House or Senate.

Many of the delegations were chosen when the civil rights bill had not been passed but seemed certain to be. Most were chosen before Goldwater's nomination and the rioting in the North.

All were selected before Johnson ruled out Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy and some others as possible running mates. Kennedy has been anathema to some Southern politicians because of his civil rights activity.

Nevertheless some old Johnson friends will be among the missing when his nomination is voted and his choice for a runningmate is ratified.

Among these are Sens. Richard B. Russell and Herman E. Talmade of Georgia, which will send five House members to the convention; Sens. Lister Hill and John Sparkman, a former vice-presidential nominee, of Alabama; Sens. John Stennis and James O. Eastland of Mississippi; Sen. Harry F. Byrd of Virginia and Sen. Allen J. Ellender of Louisiana.

Southern senators and House members—when alternates are not included will cast only 55 of the convention 585 votes to be recorded from the 13 states. But they may be considerably more potent than they number indicates in influencing the course of any convention controversy over civil rights.

These Aren't Pictures Of The Moon—Just Weeds

WEEDS AND MORE WEEDS — With nearly 30 inches of rainfall all ready recorded in Sedalia this year, weeds are growing everywhere. The above scene is a sample of just how tall they can get when unchecked.

(Democrat-Capital photos)

VACANT HOMES — Although a city ordinance calls for property owners to mow their lawns or the city will mow it and bill owners, not one bill has been sent property owners this year. Sanitation department workers apparently haven't gotten around to this place yet, to mow or bill.

UNSIGHTLY SCENE—With the Missouri State Fair only three weeks away, there is some local concern that visitors to Sedalia (some 500,000 of them) will be greeted by sights like this unless both city fathers and residents act to check the situation.

No Promise of a Future

No Hopes for Tomorrow By Millions of Asians

EDITOR'S NOTE—When Western civilization rose, Asia already was ancient. Today the burden of uncompromising centuries has brought millions to the hopeless conclusion that there is no tomorrow. Not with any hope or promise. In their agony there is an anger. Conrad Fink, Associated Press bureau chief in New Delhi who has traveled widely in Asia in the last three years, summarizes the substance of that agony and anger.

By CONRAD FINK
Associated Press Writer

Pai Chong-rok, a 24-year-old South Korean farmer, summed up Asia's agony one cold November day in the squalid village of Myung Dong.

"I don't know what we'll do," he said, and he wept in his despair.

Pai, like millions of Asians, walks with the burdens of centuries on his shoulders. Both he and his land are worn out. His children are sick. Moneylenders have mortgaged his soul, as they did his father's.

Pai wept because he could not look forward to anything better only more of the same.

"Nonsense"—it was a gay young American tourist, safe in the comfortably plush lobby of Tokyo's Imperial Hotel. "Nonsense, they have never known anything else exists. They are really quite happy."

But "They" do know. And "they" are not happy.

All across Asia—in the barren hills of Korea, the jungles of Viet Nam, the plains of India—this is what it's all about. This is what is behind the bloodshed, turmoil and agony of Asia.

Pai Chong-rok and millions like him know that other people in other lands get a day's pay for a day's work, don't have to sell themselves to moneylenders, and can look forward to being surrounded by healthy children in old age.

And "they"—all the Pai Chong-roks—are out to get theirs.

Democracy? Communsim? East-West power balance?

You tramp many dusty miles through India's villages or wade a lot of ride paddies in Viet Nam before finding anyone who really understands what those words mean.

But you don't travel far before finding someone who can describe with shattering simplicity what hunger pains feel like. Or what it is to see a child die of smallpox or cholera or malaria—diseases all but wiped out in more prosperous areas of the world.

And, if you linger a while, you find just below the surface a boiling anger.

If the Chinese Communists and their comrades in Viet Nam, Korea and Laos miscalculate on anything else, they understand completely this anger. They are busy building empires on it.

I listened one rainy night in a battered, shell-torn village in South Viet Nam as an army major translated instructions from Ho Chi Minh's Red regime in the north to Communist Viet Cong guerrillas fighting in the south.

The instructions were taken from a guerrilla's body.

Speaking softly to the people, the instructions said, promise them rice, land and freedom from "colonialists"—the people are the sea in which you, the guerrillas, will swim.

There had been no men in that village when government troops stormed in with their American advisers.

"They've all joined the Viet Cong," the major said apologetically.

All is not that dark, of course. America, with its power, hope and way of life, has won brave men to its cause.

One day in the sweltering jungle of Viet Nam's Thanh Phu peninsula, I watched little Vietnamese troopers, hardly taller than the U.S.-made M1 rifles they carried, jump from behind protective dikes and charge head-on into deadly guerrilla fire.

No one gave the command because cautious men were seeking cover that day. But the little troopers—those who still lived—charged on.

A nation could not hope for braver allies.

And no nation could send better men to this far-off part of the world than America has.

There was red-haired, energetic Lt. Col. Frank B. Clay, son of the famous Gen. Lucius D. Clay, who while advising South Viet Nam's 7th Division argued for social and economic reforms to consolidate the army's gains against the guerrillas.

"The military is only a small part of it," he said over and over. "If you can't win the support of the people you can't win the war."

There was young Capt. Jerry Scott of Ada, Okla., who came down off a hill in Korea at dawn, flushed with excitement because he had seen combat for he first time—against a North Korean raiding party.

"It was a helluva fight," Scott said.

The Clays, Scotts and Vietnamese troopers, brave as they are, don't hold the key to victory in Asia, however. The combat soldiers themselves say the key is held only by farsighted national leaders who understand the appeal the Communists have and why they have it.

South Viet Nam's President Diem didn't understand or, at least, couldn't convince his own soldiers that he did, so last year he died in a revolution.

But those who understand are trying desperately to beat the Communists to the punch, trying to quell the anger in their own people before the Reds arrive to sell their solutions to all problems.

India's leaders, among others, have heard the call for jobs, rice and security. Supported by massive U.S. aid, they're trying to answer.

Do they have time? No one knows.

Even Nehru, adored by the masses, could not produce results fast enough. He lived to see 10,000 demonstrators march on Parliament and shout "Nehru get out."

South Korea's President Chung Hee Park, who seized power three years ago, has been in trouble from the beginning, always a half step behind the people's desires for increased political liberty and economic well-being. They want it now—now, not later.

The signs that time is short worry Asia's non-Communist leaders. They feel compelled to produce and produce quickly. And in their rush, some make mistakes.

Washington Capsules

WASHINGTON (AP) — After approval of some technical amendments, the Senate passed a "freedom of information" bill Friday and sent it to the House, where its fate is uncertain.

The Senate had passed the measure Tuesday but assistant Senate Democratic leader Hubert H. Humphrey had moved to reconsider. Humphrey and Sen. Edward V. Long, D-Mo., one of the bill's sponsors, agreed to the minor amendment's Friday night and the bill was again passed without opposition.

It would spell out in detail the right of the public to information from government departments and agencies and would permit federal court suits to challenge withholding of information with the burden of proof on the government agency.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States has rejected the Soviet proposal for a new 14-nation conference on Laos. But it left the way open for possible approval later under certain conditions.

The conditions were spelled out in a note handed the Soviets Thursday and made public by the State Department Friday.

They are that the Reds cease fire in Laos and withdraw from positions taken during a recent offensive.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The sponsor of a constitutional amendment to guarantee freedom to pray in public schools Friday made what he called his final appeal to House members to sign a petition to bring it to the floor.

Rep. Frank J. Becker, R-N.Y., made several previous requests. The amendment is before the House Judiciary Committee, which completed lengthy hearings in June but has taken no action.

Becker says he has 170 of the necessary 218 signatures to force his proposal to the floor, despite what he called an organized drive by opponents to get members to remove their names.

Ann Landers

Answers Your Problems

Dear Ann Landers: I was one of those teen-agers who thought I had to have the approval of "the crowd" in everything I said and did. I thought it was smart to be just like everyone else. Then I read a poem in the school paper. I don't even know who wrote it, but it changed my life. Maybe if you print it will change the lives of others:

How absurd to be different from the crowd.
Not too loud. Not too proud.
Not too flashy. Not too brassy.
Keep it cool.
Not too mousy. Not a creep.
Not too long hair. Play it safe, Man.
Take it easy.
Not too smart, Keep it breezy.
Don't take the rap. Why be a sap?
Who wants to lead. And maybe bleed?
Don't stick your neck out, Silly Boy.
Keep still and safe and miss the joy of Knowing who you are.
Douse the flame.
Let everyone be the same.
Without a name.

Dear Ann Landers: I went with this extraordinarily beautiful girl for five months. She hypnotized me with her violet blue eyes and millions of black eyelashes.

I read her poems by Rago and Spender. She was a wonderful listener. I bought her albums of Beethoven and Brahms. Her quiet thoughtfullness as she drank in the beauty of the music was exquisite to behold. One day when I attempted to engage her in serious conversation it became apparent that her silence was born of stupidity and ignorance. The girl is a fraud and she had me completely fooled.

Will you warn others, please, and perhaps save them about $500 in books, record, and flowers? — RENOIR

Dear Ren: Why is the girl a fraud? Did she tell you she was the president of Radcliffe?

Silence, whether born of stupidity or wisdom, sounds the same. The girl did not deceive you. You deceived yourself, so stop beefing.

Dear Ann Landers: Will you please answer a simple question? Why do people send out wedding invitations to friends who live thousands of miles away when they know good and well they cannot possibly attend? To me, this is glorified begging. The same goes for birth announcements.

When my baby was born I did not mail out those precious little cards saying "Well, I'm here. I weigh 7 pounds and 11 ounces." I figured some friends would send the baby a gift, which was fine, but I did not want to put anyone on the spot.

Please print this letter and wise people up. Thank you. — ALASKA

Dear Alaska: Believe it or not, but some people LIKE wedding invitations and birth announcements. I am not among them, however, and I have said so, repeatedly.

I figure that the people who are interested KNOW that a hitching or a birth took place because they are in touch by phone or letter. The others couldn't care less, so why bother them?

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Good Evidence Men Can Land On Moon

By RALPH DIGHTON
Associated Press Science Writer

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Historic pictures taken by Ranger 7 are pretty good evidence men can land on the moon without much change required for spaceships now being designed.

That's the consensus of a board of scientists who Friday night released 10 of the 4,316 sensational photographs Ranger 7 snapped in the final 16 minutes and 40 seconds before it crashed on the moon at 8:25 a.m. (EST) Friday morning.

The first close-up pictures ever taken of the moon — termed 1,000 times better than any made heretofore from spacecraft or with earth telescopes—showed that even its vast, apparently smooth "seas" are pocked with craters, some as small as dishpans.

There may be some dust on the moon, in layers up to a foot thick, but not deep enough to bury a landing vehicle, the scientists concluded. And, underneath the dust, evidence indicates, is a hard primary layer. Whether it would support the weight of a large manned spaceship cannot be determined from photographs alone.

To these conclusions announced after several hours study Friday night, additional evaluations will be added today at a presidential press conference.

Dr. William H. Pickering, director of Jet Propulsion Laboratory which made Ranger 7 and released the first pictures, left late Friday to attend the White House session.

President Johnson earlier telephoned congratulations to Pickering and others at the laboratory, which was much criticized in recent months for six straight failures in the $200 million Ranger moon research program.

At Friday's news conference where slides of the historic moon pictures were shown, Dr. Gerard Kuiper, of the Lunar and Planetary Laboratory of the University of Arizona, said the most signicfiant thing about them is that they reveal no unanticipated problems to be met in the design of moon landing craft.

At least part of the area photographed by Ranger 7 — a northern extension of the Sea of Clouds southwest of the center of the face of the moon — would be unsuitable for landing because of the large number of small craters, Kuiper said.

"If you want to land a ship, you want to do it with as little damage as possible," he said. "So you pick an area where the ship is not likely to tip over or have to land on a litter of debris."

The thousands of tiny pock marks, he said, seemed to cluster at some distance from large primary craters such as Copernicus, about 200 miles north of the target zone.

This indicates the big craters were created by meteors and meteorites which exploded on impact and threw out fragments of many sizes, Kuiper explained.

Between the big primary craters and the clusters of secondary craters around them, however, are relatively "clean" areas which could be good landing sites, he said.

Dr. Eugene Shoemaker of the U.S. Geological Survey at Flagstaff, Ariz., another of the five experts who studied Ranger 7's photographs, suggested that future moon probes study the texture of the surface in the centers of large craters.

Shoemaker was asked if he would be afraid to step out of a landing craft onto the kind of surface shown in the photographs. He answered: "I wouldn't be very worried."

He said, however, there was no way to check the load-bearing strength of the moon's crust from photographs alone.

The photographs, taken from 1,300 miles out down to 1,000 feet, seemed to resolve an old controversy over whether dust on the moon is thick enough to swallow a landing craft.

The fact that rocks thrown from the big craters often were still visible in the bottoms of the shallow craters they created indicated that the dust ranges from a few inches to no more than a foot in depth, the scientists said.

One of the surprising things the photographs showed, Kuiper said, was that the smaller craters were rounded and soft-looking, completely lacking the sharp jaggedness of the big craters.

One explanation, he said, would be that they were made in dust, not in the hard basic material which seems to underlay the dust.

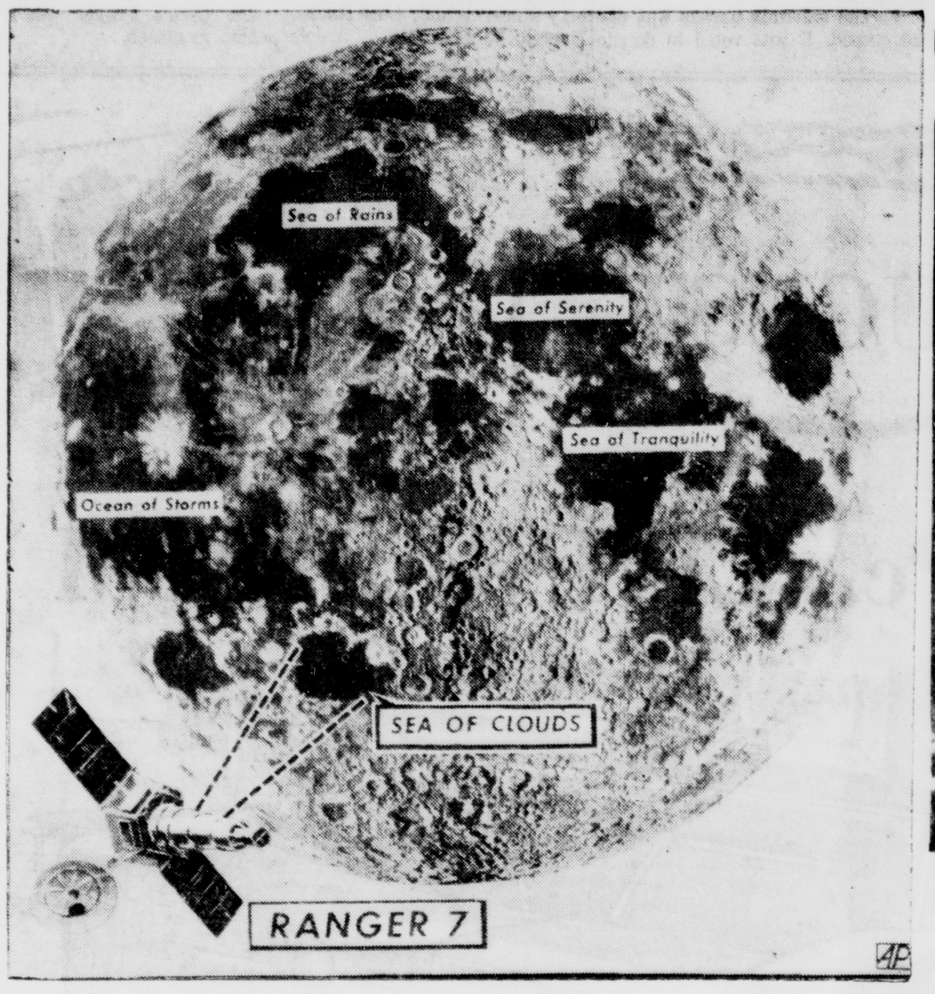

Kuiper said there were many evidences of volcanic activity in the moon's crust and that some of the steeper craters might be extinct volcanos.

The excellence of the photographs was a fitting climax to the spectacularly accurate marksmanship of the Ranger shot.

When launched from Cape Kennedy Fla., last Tuesday, its trajectory was so near perfect it would have hit the moon without use of a small rocket built in to correct its course midway.

It would have landed on the back side of the moon, however, defeating the purpose of the photographic expedition. With a minor adjustment, scientists brought it on course so it would hit within 10 miles of its intended goal.

Russia's Lunik III took pictures of the far side of the moon in 1959 but was so far out — about 40,000 miles — that the details were indistinct.

WHERE RANGER HIT MOON — Dotted lines extending from sketch of Ranger 7 spacecraft indicate approximate area of moon's surface where landing took place July 31. Impact area was limited to a zone 30 by 120 miles in the Sea of Clouds. (AP Wirephoto).

Crosses on Photos Distortion Checks

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Small black crosses, Ts and Ls seen on moon pictures taken by the Ranger 7 spacecraft were explained today as reference marks meant to show if distortion occurred in the pictures.

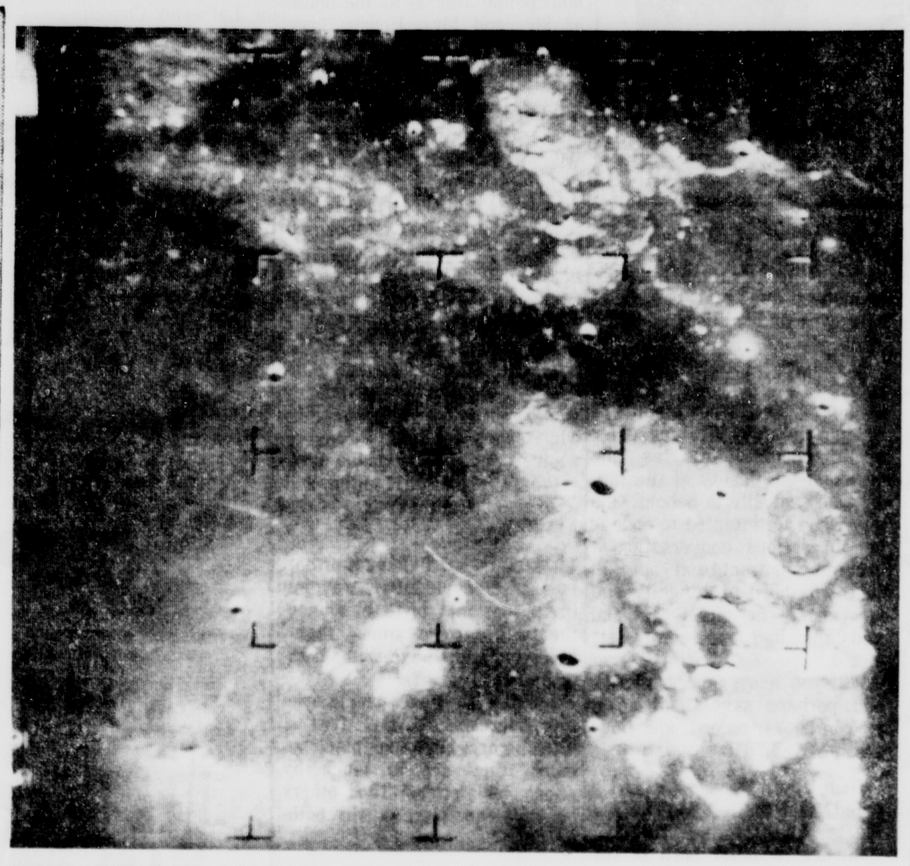

All pictures released Friday night by the Jet Propulsion Laboratory bore similar marks, spokesmen said.

It was not explained whether the marks were transmitted as art of the pictures from the spacecraft or superimposed later at JPL.

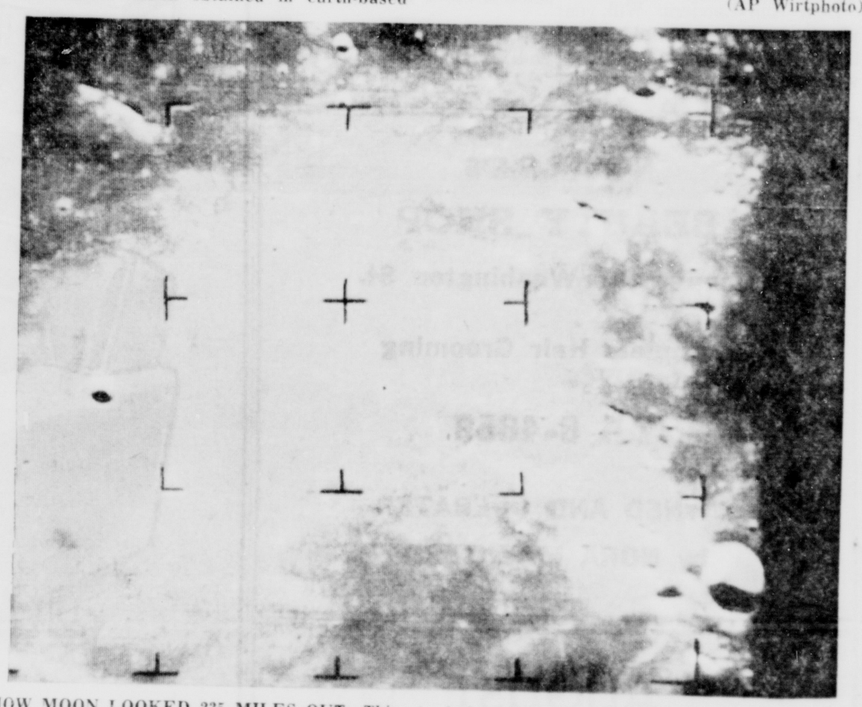

Wasson Reunion

The annual Wasson family reunion will be held Sunday, Aug. 9, at the Mt. Herman Church.

MOON PHOTOGRAPHED FROM ALTITUDE OF 480 MILES—This picture of the moon made by Ranger 7 was taken from an altitude of 480 miles. Scientists at Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena said it closely duplicates the resolution obtained in earth-based photography. Large open crater is Lubiniezky. Black marks on this and other photos are fiducial marks used for scale references. They enable scientists to determine if any distortion occurred when picture was made. (AP Wirtphoto)

HOW MOON LOOKED 235 MILES OUT—This photograph of the moon, relayed to the earth by Ranger 7 spacecraft, was made from an altitude of 235 miles 2 minutes and 46 seconds before Ranger 7 crashed. The photo shows an area about 113 miles on a side. Smallest craters are about 1,000 feet in diameter. (AP Wirephoto)

Reds Point To Previous Moon Photos

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

America's Ranger 7 moon shot drew worldwide praise today, including compliments from the Russians who were quick to point out that they snapped the first lunar photographs five years ago.

Some British newspapers said the shot put the United States ahead of the Soviet Union in the space race. Most of the world press hailed it as one of the great advances in lunar astronomy, without reference to competition between the two major powers.

News that the United States had the first close-up pictures of the moon won front-page headlines in major capitals even before the photographs were made public.

Soviet Professor Gigran Melkumov called the shot "brilliant," Moscow Radio reported.

"We are told that the pictures are excellent. What is important is that they were taken at close range. They show things that could never be seen in any other way," he said.

Tass, the Soviet news agency, said: "Soviet scientists are happy to note that the launching of Ranger 7 is a new national achievement of the United States in its program of exploration of the moon and a contribution to the study of outer space."

The agency added: "The Soviet Union was the pioneer of taking photographs of the moon by means of an automatic interplanetary station. The world remembers that in October of (1959) the reverse invisible (dark) side of the moon was photographed."

The Soviet still pictures of the far side of the moon provided the first solid evidence of what the hidden side looked like, but the photographs were not close-up.

Chancellor Ludwig Erhard of West Germany said in a telegram to President Johnson: "We are happy with the American people over this tremendous technical and scientific achievement."

The news was broadcast every hour by the Communist Czechoslovak Radio and in Budapest a Communist Hungarian news agency quoted space travel expert Enroe Nagy, who praised the achievement.

Therapy Center Reviews Year

With the close of the fiscal year of the Children's Therapy Center at Bothwell Hospital there is a feeling of satisfaction as the staff looks backwards on this year of progress in the lives of youngsters who, in one way or another, are handicapped.

This satisfaction overflows to the people of Pettis County, for few of the county have not contributed, one way of another, to drives and projects during the year in order to be certain that "Every child has a right" regardless of its handicap.

At the close of the year on June 1, the enrollment was 121, and these are receiving services as follows: Preschool, 24; ungraded classroom, 19; speech therapy, 48; physical therapy, 15; occupational therapy, 17; sheltered workshop, six; and supervised home program with regularly scheduled rechecks.

During the past 12 months period the following therapies have been given to children and adults at the Center; 1177 physica therapy treatments; 1166 occupational therapy treatments; 2159 speech therapy lessons; 283 physical medicine and rehabilitation examinations and 71 psychological evaluations.

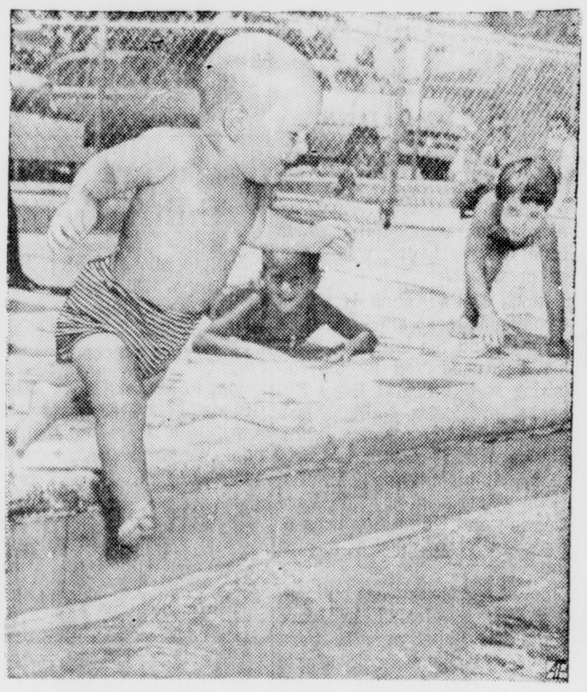

On June 1, 1963 there was an enrollment of 127 at the Center, with 134 referrals from June 1963 to June 1, 1964 and 140 terminations from June 1963 to June 1, 1964.

From its inception until June 1, 1964, the Center has given some type of service to 790 children and adults. During that period of time 699 have been dismissed for various reasons, some with maxium correction, some entered public school after partial correction, others moved from this area, some were referred to other sources and some were evaluated and found to need no Center Services. These children and adults came from 16 counties.

Handicaps resulting from the following conditions have been or are now being served at the Center: functional articulation, cleft palate, aphasia, cerebral palsy, multiple sclerosis, amyotonia congenita, neuromyelitis, encephalitis, microcephalus, torticallis, cystic fibrosis, mental retardation, brain tumor, amputation, stroke, delayed speech, laryngectomy, deaf, polio, scoliasis, spinabifida, guillian barre, mongolism, cretinism, perthes disease, epilepsy, mental emotional, carcinoma, traumatic paraplegia, cerebral aneurysm, stuttering, dysphonia, hard of hearing, muscular dystrophy, rheumatoid arthritis, platybasia, spinal meningitis, hydrocaphalus, achondrophlasia, brachial plexus injury, hurler's syndrome,, drain damage, club foot foot, injuries.

The Center is a cooperative effort by the pepole in the county to furnish services to all types of handicaps, and no matter what type of handicap a person might be interested in, there is at least one having such a handicap at the Center, thus the rehabilitation in this county goes much further. Other communities have the same drives but each organization tries to maintain its own little center for one type of handicap. Pettis County organizations pool their efforts and have one truly remarkable center for all types of handicaps.

The interest of the people of the community seems to increase each year, the rehabilitation bond sale each year grows bigger, the special projects by organizations and the contributions by both organizations and individuals, assures the Center that the people want to help in this effort to teach and train children and give them a chance, as well as the services they are able to furnish to handicapped adults as well.

Communists Have Their Teen Trouble

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP)—A "big beat" contest for amateur jazz bands ended in an uproar in Communist Prague's Park of Culture. Hundreds of teen-agers scattered sneezing powder, tore down curtains and threw chairs around the hall.

When police were called, the youths scattered and later roamed the streets, tearing down flags and assaulting pedestrians.

In the Black Sea resort of Varna, teen-age Bulgarian call girls entice Western holidaymakers and "sleep with them for a pair of nylons," a Sofia newspaper reported.

In Poland, gangs of teen-age toughs molest pedestrians and make it dangerous for them to walk the public parks after dark.

Communist East Europe has much the same problem with unruly teen-agers as do Western nations.

The majority of teen-agers under communism are law-abiding. They do their work and study diligently. But there is one major disappointment for Communist organizers: They can't get youth worked up about Communist ideals. They have trouble getting them to attend Marxist indoctrination courses.

Most East European youngsters would rather be off with their girls. Or, if they are lucky, with their motorcycles.

Throughout Eastern Europe the teen-agers have different status symbols. For some it's skintight blue jeans—American jeans being preferred — and babydoll skirts. For others, it's Italian sweaters or pointed shoes. For others, it's Beatle haircuts, or beatnik beards.

Common to all, however, is the popularity of American and Western European jazz. They tape jazz and the latest Western hits, and they dance the twist everywhere except in Bulgaria, where it is forbidden.

For many years, especially in Stalinist days, the Communist regimes used brutal tactics to try to curb youthful zest and curiosity about Western things. Many who affected Western clothes were beaten up, jailed, deported or put on forced labor.

Now the regimes have changed, with the exception of Bulgaria, where mild pressure still is being used. The attitude of most Communist leaders is: "If you can't beat them, join them."

Some 10 million American homes used central oil heating during 1961.

Trimble Makes Final Drive Through Area

James G. Trimble, Democratic candidate for Attorney General of Missouri, carried the campaign to Sedalia Saturday morning.

"Every person who reads the newspapers or listens to the news knows there is a problem of organized crime in Missouri," Trimble said. "And I believe the people have a right to know why any candidate for Attorney General would refuse to take a stand against organized crime."

Trimble restated his platform: to crack down on fraudulent insurance operations in Missouri, traffic court reforms, protection of individual rights, prison reforms, and creation of an anti-rackets division for the Attorney General's Office. He also favors expansion of the non-partisan court plan in St. Louis County and Clay County.

Pre-enrollment Dates At Sedalia Schools

P. A. Sillers, director of elementary education, said Saturday first graders and all new grade school students are to go to their respective schools for pre-school enrollment Aug. 19 and 20. Parents should take immunization records with them. If there is any question about what school a child is to attend, parents may call the Board of Education office at Smith-Cotton High School, TA 6-1054 for information.

Orientation Day at Smith-Cotton High School will be Sept. 3 for all eighth graders and new high school students. Registration of new students at S-C is now being accepted in the office of Principal Forrest L. Drake.

Involved were a 1956 Dodge, driven east on Saline by Jose Buso, 57, 315 East Harvey, and a 1964 Chevrolet, driven south on New York by Larry McCown, 19, Route 4.

Damaged were the front bumper, grille, hood, and headlight of the Buso car and the right rear fender, bumper, and lower left side of the McCown car.

Both drivers received police summonses for careless and imprudent driving and are to appear in police court, Aug. 4.

The 1800 block of West Broadway was the scene of a two-car collision at 7:45 p.m. Friday.

Involved were two east bound vehicles. One was a 1957 Chevrolet, driven by Clyde E. Harrison, 54, Richland, Mo., and the other was a 1964 Ford pick-up, driven by Curtis H. Jackson, 34, Kansas City.

Damaged was the left rear fender and bumper of the Harrison car and the hood, grille and front bumper of the Jackson truck.

The drivers of two vehicles reported to police Friday that they were involved in an accident on a private parking lot in the 100 block of West Broadway.

Reporting the accident were Eugene George, 21, Route 1, Smithton, the driver of a 1964 Plymouth, and Jerry Pottorff, 19, Route 1, Sedalia, the driver of a 1958 Plymouth.

Damage was to the rear of the George car only.

Three arrests were made Friday utilizing the police radar speed timing device within a 30 minute period. The arrests were made between 7:15 and 7:45 p.m. in the 1300 and 1600 blocks of West Broadway.

A four-barrel carburetor was stolen overnight Friday from a 1957 Pontiac automobile parked on the lot of the T & G Motor Company. Homer Thomas, an employee, reported the theft to police Saturday morning.

A window in the Sears-Roebuck order store, 117 East Third, was found broken about 10:40 p.m. Friday night and police shortly thereafter arrested a 24-year-old man for investigation of breaking and entering.

No charges were filed, however, and police said the man was released later after arrangements had been made to pay for the broken glass.

Mrs. Bud McCown, Route 4, reported the theft or articles valued at $15 from her 1959 Ford while parked at Third and Ohio, June 25, to police Saturday. A window rug and a violin shaped pillow were reported stolen.

A thief made off with 11 doilies, three sheets, two shirts and one dress from the clothes line of the Earl Homan residence, 1634 East Fifth. Mrs. Homan reported the theft to police Saturday and reported that it occurred sometime Friday evening.

Earl Bell, 705 West Second, reported to police Saturday that he had found two boxes of .22 caliber rifle shells. He noted that several neighborhood children had been in possession of them.

Ban-the-Bomb War of Words Conference

TOKYO (AP) — A ban-the-bomb conference here has exploded into a war of words, with Soviet and Red Chinese factions grappling for control of the world peace movement.

The two Communist giants called rival news conferences Friday and accused each other of torpedoing the 10th International Ban-The-Bomb Conference.

The Soviet bloc delegation, representatives from 28 other countries and three other front organizations, bolted from the meeting Friday after the Chinese froze the Russians out of a share in the leadership.

Some African and Asian delegations backed Soviet charges that the Chinese had packed the conference leadership.

Soviet delegation leader Georgy Zhukov, a top propagandist, said at a three-hour news conference that responsibility for the walkout was that of the Red Chinese, who turned it into "an arena for an unbridled slanderous campaign against the Soviet Union."

Chinese delegate Tan Mingchao, in a separate lengthy meeting with the press, replied that Zhukov was guilty of "hypocrisy" and "double-faced tactics."

Dr. Homer A. Jack of New York City, an executive of the Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy (SANE), attended the Russian news conference and later told newsmen: "We are trying to get the anti-nuclear movement back to being a humanitarian one rather than ideological."

Viet Cong Stages A Daring Hit

VINH LOC, Viet Nam (AP) — A battalion of Communist Viet Cong guerrillas attacked this village only four miles west of Saigon Saturday in a daring assault which followed several days of distributing leaflets warning they would strike.

Casualties were light and the Viet Cong abandoned the fight at daybreak. But the attack was significant because of its proximity to the capital. A Viet Cong battalion usually numbers about 500.

Only rice paddy fields separate the village from Saigon's busy airport. The guerrillas were as close to Saigon as it is possible to get without entering the city's suburbs.

American servicemen at the airport said buildings shook under the Communist mortar barrage and tracer bullets were seen streaking through the sky.

As Saigon reverberated with the sound of exploding mortar shells, residents feared an attempt was being made to overthrow Premier Nguyen Khanh.

Viet Cong units struck from the west and south. Their mortar shells and recoilless rifles smashed a small civil guard outpost. One civil guard defender was killed and three wounded.

Bullets spattered around civilian houses, wounding three other persons.

Newsmen who drove to Vinh Loc across a rutted dirt road saw three Viet Cong bodies in the village market place.

In Kuala Lumpur, South Vietnamese Defense Minister Maj. Gen. Tran Thiem Khiem said it may be necessary in the future to ask for U. S. combat troops to keep his country from falling to the Communists.

Tran told newsmen if Communist powers came out in open aggression against South Viet Nam, then his country "must ask for help from the United States, the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization (SEATO) and the free world. But for the time being we do not need (U. S.) combat troops."

On Friday, Premier Khanh, apparently bowing to U.S. diplomatic pressure, repudiated his "back to the north" policy statements calling for offensive thrusts against North Viet Nam.

Khanh said South Viet Nam "can no longer tolerate the inhuman massacre of their fellow citizens by the Communists," but said his policy "does not for the moment mean we must send our troops to strike North Viet Nam."

Nevertheless, North Viet Nam charged Saturday that two islands off its coast were shelled by U. S. and South Vietnamese vessels Thursday night.

"This is the only place in the world," he said, "where there is such a combination of art and science, of history and of the past and the future."

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Actress Joan Crawford has entered Cedars of Lebanon Hospital for the third time in two months for what is called a recurrence of pneumonia.

She entered the hospital in Hollywood Friday. Her condition was described as good.

ASPEN, Colo. (AP)—English composer Benjamin Britten, winner of the first Aspen Award Friday, says he'll use part of the $30,000 to establish an award for a British musical composition that is "a pleasure to perform."

WWI: The First Campaign

By FRED CHEVAL

GEMMENICH, Belgium (AP)—It was a fresh sunny morning on Aug. 4, 1914 when a company of German cavalry trotted through this border village in the green foothills of the Ardennes Mountains.

The first campaign of World War I had opened.

The Uhlans, despite their spiked German helmets, were flying Belgium's black, yellow and gold from their steel-headed, 12-foot lances.

Said the war manual of the German General Staff:

"The wearing of enemy uniforms and the use of enemy or neutral flags of insignia with the aim of decoy are declared permissible."

Antoine Reynders is 75 now and still lives in Gemmenich. He remembers what the Uhlans looked like, and the strong smell of new leather from their belts and straps and saddles.

"We were not expecting them," he recalls, "but we didn't believe them either when they handed out tracts saying King Albert of Belgium had asked their help to fight the French."

Nor had the king who just 25 hours earlier had turned down a German ultimatum, taken command of the Belgian army and ordered the bridges over the Meuse River to be blown up.

The following evening, Britain sent Germany an ultimatum of its own: Get out of Belgium or we fight. Theobald von Bethmann-Hollweg, the German chancellor, was angry with the British ambassador who delivered it. He accused Britain of going to war "all for just a word —'neutrality'—just for a scrap of paper."

The scrap of paper—a description that echoed around the world— was Belgium's peace treaty with Holland, signed 75 years before and guaranteed by all the great European powers, Prussia as well as Britain.

"Belgium is an independent state, perpetually neutral," the treaty said.

Britain was bound to defend this neutrality and it did, though it was not pure indignation that drove Britian to fight. A successful campaign by the Germans would have put them in possession of the Belgian and French ports on the English Channel, an hour's steaming from the British coast.

Germany had been building up its navy to challenge Britain's. German command of the channel ports would have laid Britain wide open to invasion.

Bad German behavior in Belgium, diligently publicized and often exaggerated by propagandists, added every day to the strong feeling aroused by the invasion.

The German troops had a neurotic fear of snipers. They also resented Belgian military resistance as a kind of affront, feeling that the Belgians should not have interfered with passage through their country to attack France.

Antoine Reynders remembers the "Death's Head Hussars"—their insignia was a skull and crossbones—who came to Gemmenich two days after the war started.

"They knew the troops before them had met with strong resistance at Liege," he remembers. "Gentleness and charm were gone."

During the first month of the war at least 5,200 Belgian civilians were executed and more than 25,000 buildings destroyed, mostly by fire.

What brought world indignation to a climax was the destruction of Louvain, a university town; where German anger turned against bricks, books and art treasures.

The Germans razed Louvain, including the library of which nothing was left but ashes. They killed 218 people, including 20 women and 11 children.

The world reaction was one of horror, and the Germans felt moved to reply. The emperor explained that what his army had done in Belgium was the "result of the criminal and barbarous action of the Belgians." A group of world-renowned Germans issued a denial that German troops had brutally destroyed Louvain. They were not believed.

Less than a week after the destruction of Louvain, the British, French and Russian governments signed a pact barring a separate peace. Belgium had clarified the issues.

King Albert carefully conserved his limited resources of men. He refused to have them join the Allied offensives and sent them forward only in the final, victorious drive of 1918. Belgium lost about 40,000 men in the war, but its percentage of loss was low compared to the major belligerents.

When it ended, Belgium was awarded 382 square miles of territory that had been held by Germany—the cantons of Eupen, Malmedy and Moresnet, not far from Gemmenich.

FUTURE TESTS FOR GEMINI

SPACE TIMETABLE—America's astronauts plan to spend about 700 hours in space in the two-man Gemini capsule by the end of 1965. Chart above gives the breakdown on the four trips. Until now, all U.S. space vehicles have been manned by a single astronaut. The Gemini will bring team flights. Veteran Gus Grissom has been teamed up with John Young to pilot the initial test. The second mission will team James A. McDivitt and Edward H. White, and it will mark the first time that one of the original seven astronauts will not be represented. The two remaining flights have no definite crews. However, Gordon Cooper and Charles Conrad are front runners for the fourth test, a tricky docking-in-space assignment.

Unique UN Group Holds 500th Meet

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—The Military Staff Committee, a unique group in the United Nations, held its 500th meeting the other day.

The committee has met every two weeks for 18 years, but has not even considered any matter of substance since 1947. The meetings are all secret.

This group is the only body in the world where generals and admirals of the United States, Britain, France, the Soviet Union and Nationalist China sit down together at regular intervals.

It is the only military organ specifically provided for in the U.N. Charter, but it has never had any part in directing the U.N. military operations, including those in Korea, the Middle East, the Congo and Cyprus.

Despite the fact that it does nothing, there has never been a proposal from any of its five members or from United Nations officials that the sessions be dropped.

The committee was set up in 1946 in accordance with Article 46 of the charter, which called for the creation of such a group to establish an international military force and to assist the Security Council in military matters.

The charter specifies that the committee be made up of the chiefs of staff of the five big powers or their representatives The chiefs of staffs have never actually served on the committee, but it has had numerous big-name admirals and generals as members. These include such U.S. figures as Air Force Gen. George C. Kenney and Army Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway.

Beginning in 1946 the committee met daily for two years trying to agree on plans for an international force to be composed primarily of big-power forces, including land, sea and air contingents. It finally became apparent that, in the face of East-West differences, it would be impractical to leave the U.N. peacekeeping operations in the hands of the big powers.

If they couldn't agree on how to constitute the force, it seemed apparent they could not agree on when the force should be used and on its day-to-day command.

Since 1947, the committee meetings have followed a simple pattern.

In full uniform the high brass gathers in a secluded room at U.N. headquarters. The session is called to order by the current chairman — rotating each month. The agenda is adopted, the minutes of the last meeting are approved, the time of the next meeting is set and the meeting adjourned. Sometimes there are brief speeches of welcome for new members.

Why keep up the seemingly useless meetings?

Officials of the countries involved feel there may be a day when the original intent of the charter can be carried out on creation of a big-power U.N. force. One possibility, they say, might be a role in keeping peace in the event of a general disarmament agreement.

One of the few remembered decisions of the committee was a unanimous agreement to accept an invitation from the Chamber of Commerce at Minot, N.D., to fly out for a pheasant hunt. This was in 1947. All members, including Soviet Lt. Gen. Andrei R. Sharapov, reported the hunt a big success.

OTTAWA (AP)—Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip will spend Canada's Thanksgiving Day holiday in Ottawa, and informants say the queen may be asked to open a session of Parliament.

Prime Miniter Lester B. Pearson announced in Commons Thursday that the queen and Prince Philip will visit Ottawa. It was announced some months ago that Elizabeth would visit Charlottetown and Quebec City to mark the centennial of the 1864 pre-confederation conferences there. The Ottawa visit will be an extension of that trip.

The royal couple will be in Charlottetown Oct. 6-7, then travel by yacht to Quebec City for ceremonies there Oct. 10. They will fly to Ottawa Oct. 11 and leave Oct. 13.

WARSAW (AP) — Wladyslaw Gomulka, chairman of the Polish Communist party, and Premier Jozef Cyrankiewicz are vacationing in the Soviet Crimea, say diplomatic sources.

There was no official confirmation. Government spokesmen and the press normally do not annonuce the whereabouts of Communist officials.

Merchants Vie For Title

Red Birds Down Blues To Go Into Loser's Play-Off

BULLETIN

Fulton Sports defeated the Columbia Merchants, 8-1, in the night cap Saturday night, and will move into the loser bracket finals to meet the Jefferson City Red Birds at 6 o'clock tonight.

Winner of this game will play the Sedalia Merchants for the 1964 title of the Missouri Non-Pro Baseball Tournament. The Red Birds are the 1963 defending champions.

Rivalry is strong between Fulton-Jefferson City and the Merchants.

The championship game is scheduled for 8 o'clock tonight.

The Jefferson City Red Birds defeated West Plains Blues, 7-2, in the first game of the State Non-Pro tourney Saturday night to go to the play-off in the loser bracket Sunday night. The Red Birds 1963 defending champions, will meet the winner of the Columbia Merchants and Fulton Sports, who played the nightcap game.

Because of the intense daytime heat, Commissioner George Ray has switched the Sunday game times. The first game which was scheduled for 1 p.m. has been moved to 6 p.m. this evening. The championship game will be played about 8 p.m.

Commissioner Ray also indicated the final play-off, if necessary would be either next Wednesday or Thursday. The big "IF" is should the Sedalia Merchants lose the game tonight, it will be necessary for a play-off game. If the Merchants win they will be the 1964 Missouri Champions and head to Wichita, Kan., to play, Aug. 14, in the National Baseball Congress Tournament of Champions.

The game opened as if it might be a quick "bobtail" contest, when the Red Birds staged a first inning rally, but cut to only three runs. From then on through the fifth inning a real pitcher's battle developed.

In the opening inning Don Vache singled to center, to second on a wild pitch. Ray Scott walked. On a double steal Vache went to third and Scott to second. Ray Uriarte walked. Butch Waggoner struck out. Vache scored scored on a wild pitch. Dave Smith struckout. Rich Alberts was safe on an error by the shortstop, Scott and Uriarte both scored on the play. Jim Pace struckout to end the inning. Three runs, one hit, one error.

At the top of the sixth the Red Birds scored another run. Butch Waggoner was on the second baseman's error, and went to second on the throw to first. Dave Smith grounded to second. Rich Alberts singled through first and Waggoner scored. Jim Pace struckout. Roy Cunningham popped to third. One run, one hit, and one error.

Two more runs were scored in the top of the seventh when Bill Chism grounded to the pitcher. Vache was hit by a pitched ball. Scott doubled to center. Vache stopping at third. Uriarte singled to centerfield scoring Vache and Scott and Uriarte to second on the throw. Waggoner flied to center and was followed by Dave Smith. Two runs, two hits, no errors.

The Birds picked up a run in the ninth after Clarkson grounded to third. Vache struckout. Scott doubled to center. Uriarte singled to left scoring Scott. Waggoner hit to left field, Uriarte to second. Smith struck out.

West Plains kept from being shutout when they scored two runs in the bottom of the ninth. Lee Hall struck out. Dale Mitchell singled to right field. Jim Warren grounded to short. Junior Baker walked. Garth Yarnell up. Bill Perkins running for Mitchell stole second, and on a wild pitch Perkins scored and Baker to third. Yarnell singled through second, scoring Baker. Kay popped to third. Two runs, two hits, no errors.

Friday's Games

One of the best games to be played in the 1964 Missouri State Non-Pro Baseball Tournament was that of Friday night when the Sedalia Merchants squeezed out a one to nothing shutout over the 1963 defending champions, Jefferson City's Red Birds. More than 500 fans were in the stands many elated over the victory but the visitors leaving without a grumble but somewhat disappointed.

The game was the only regular tournament contest of the evening, West Plains advancing in the loser's bracket when the Bolivar Merchants failed to field a team. Eight Bolivar players were on time, but three others failed to show up in the time limit of 20 minutes after game time is called at 7 o'clock. They were Jerry Kirksey, Charles Allen and Robert Looney, and what happened to them was not learned.

But for sportsmanship and to keep the fans present entertained with baseball, and there were more than 200 at the time, the Bolivar team took the field with their business manager making up the ninth player for an exhibition four-inning contest with West Plains. At the end of four West Plains had a two-zero lead.

It was a terrific game with the pitchers working hard, putting their heart in every pitch they made. On the other hand the players were providing some fine defense work, only one error actually being a costly one and that was on the Red Bird team.

It all came in the top of the seventh inning when the Merchanges moved out front with a 1-0 lead and this stood for the remainder of the game. It all happened thusly: Bill Morgan and Charles Newman both went down swinging. Jim Fall sent a sharp single to left field. John "Butch" Higgins hit one to the shortstop and Jerry Duescher, juggled the ball and was late on the throw to first. Fall moved to second base. Larry Bowes hit a hot one through second for a single and Fall dashed around the bases and came sliding safely across home plate. Higgins played it safe and held up at second and Bowes on first. Marshall Bryan went down the strikeout route. One run, two hits and one error, and it was this error which proved to be costly to the Red Birds.

The Merchants had an excellent chance in the top of the first inning, but what caused Marshall Bryan to get picked off at first by the pitcher was not discussed. Had the Sedalians played a little safer ball at this point and with Don Crank getting a double to centerfield, there was little doubt that Marshall could have at least made it safely to third, and scored on Hill's long fly to center field.

Then again the Merchants had a big opportunity in the eighth when after one out Crank beat out an infield hit. Bill Hill singled to left field and Crank was safe at second but thrown out easily by Clarkson at third. Again had he played it safe, a different story might have been told.

The big fact remains the Merchants were successful in getting that big score in the seventh, enough to win.

The Merchants now sit and wait until this afternoon to meet the winner of the loser bracket—it could easily be either the Fulton Sports or Jefferson City again. Should Sedalia lose this afternoon, the play-off game will be played next week sometime, the date to be set.

Chiefs Travel To Marshall For Sunday Contest

The Sedalia Chiefs travel to Marshall Sunday afternoon to play a twin bill with the locals there. The players will leave at 11:30 a.m. from Broadway Realty, with the first game due to start at 1 p.m. The record for the Chiefs this season stands unmarred at 15-0.

Tuesday night, Aug. 4, the Chiefs return to the Liberty Park diamond to host Columbia. The Columbia team has added some extra strength in their lineup since the Chiefs defeated them earlier this year 2-0. However, the Chiefs have built up such a tremendous momentum, having won 34 straight league games without a defeat, that the game should prove to be a real battle.

Both Sedalia and Columbia are leading their respective divisions for the second half of play. Game time is scheduled for 8 p.m.

Ten-Man Horseshoe Tourney Is Resumed

The ten-man round robin horseshoe tournament was resumed Thursday night at Liberty Park, following two weeks of two six-man contests. The tournament was two players short of the normal 12 who participate.

Placing third was Wayne Winston; fourth Bud Larson; fifth, A. Brownfield; sixth, C. Charles seventh, C. Rush; eighth, V. Abney; ninth, E. Stumpf; tenth, C. Martin.

Time trials will be held at 1 p.m. and the first of six races each day at 2:30.

The Waco, Tex. veteran who set a new world's record of 35.78 seconds for the one-mile track here last year, at the wheel of the famed Wienberger Chevy, will have a new power plant under him when he competes in the two-day speed program.

The 41-year-old Texan will have a brand new red, white and blue STP Special for the Sedalia races, carrying the traditional No. 1, denoting the championship he won. The car is the former Roy Thomas Offenhauser ond holds the world's record for 15 miles with Hershel Wagner driving here in 1959. It has been completely rebuilt and has carried Woolley to a number of moneyed positions in early season races.

Woolley led the Missouri Futurity on the mile track until the 48th lap when Al Unser drove under him and went on to win. Unser later won the Pike's Peak hill climb, in the McGowen Chevy, which copped the last two Missouri Futurities here.

IMCA late model stock car races will be held Sunday afternoon, Aug. 23, and Saturday afternoon, Aug. 29. Midget races will be held on the half mile track, Saturday night, Aug. 29.

MICKEY OWEN AND JACK AUSTIN — Jack Austin, 14, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Austin, 1101 South Warren, is shown consulting with Mickey Owen, owner, operator and instructor of the Mickey Owen Baseball School at Miller, Mo. Reports from the school are Jack felt a bit nervous the first time he was introduced over the student-operated public address system. "But, that's worn off now."

"Jack has played at least two games each day following a daily practice session on the instructional field in the mornings. He has made daily improvement, and a terrific base runner, he is," Owen said.

Sports Scraps

By D. KELLY SCRUTON

POLITICS, some say it isn't sports, but others like myself feel it's one of the greatest games of sport. Political races are almost like horse racing, track meets, auto racing, etc. You pick your favorite and most usually "ride" it through.

Just so the readers of this column can be kept straight on the present primary race, I have picked my horse, runner or racer to win, and I personally believe Missourians are going to put the fuel to him to win on Tuesday.

Much has been said about the various candidates on the Democratic ticket for governor. Both men are well educated, gentlemen and outstanding, but I picked Warren E. Hearnes, Secretary of State, to win the primary, and am "riding" him through to the finish.

Tuesday is the finish line and it's a good bet the man with the 14 years experience in Missouri government will cross the line first.

I say this just so the good readers do not confuse D.K.S. with G.H.S. Thanks for reading.

LOCAL golf at the Sedalia Country Club. The latest occurred Friday evening when Mike DeLozier, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. DeLozier, made his first thriller a — hole-in-one — on "Little Dinky." Young DeLozier aced the 125-yard hole with a nine iron.

"Little Dinky" is the number seven hole of the club's course.

Mike was playing a Titleist ball which I expect "Speck" will try to have gold plated—or hide it and try to use it himself. "Speck" is Mike's father.

Witnessing the shot was Damon Hieronymus, one of the "old timers" at the Country Club course.

Last Sunday the club championship was won by Dick Bigelow, not to be outdone by his wife, Barbara "Bobby" Bigelow, who took the honors in the women's division in 1963.

Bigelow defeated Charles Patterson, III, 6 up four, for the title.

Mrs. Bigelow is just about to enter the women's tournament which is starting and will be out to defend her title —just to keep on par with her husband.

THE Missouri State Non-Pro Baseball Tournament enters into the finals this afternoon. The possibility is the Sedalia Merchants, the only undefeated team, will meet again the Jefferson City Merchants over whom they won Friday night, 1-0.

A change in the schedule was announced late Saturday night for the Sunday games. Instead of playing under the hot sun the time has been switched. The first game is now scheduled for 6 p.m. between the two teams left in the loser's bracket. The winner will meet the Sedalia Merchants at 8 o'clock for the championship.

Should the Merchants lose this Sunday night game, it will be tied up and the play-off will then be scheduled for a night this week, possibly Wednesday night.

The Merchants, however, do not anticipate a loss and are hoping to sail through the tournament undefeated. As a loyal Sedalia rooter, I hope they can have their wish and continue it on through the National Baseball Congress Tournament at Wichita, Kan., later this month.

All-Star Team Member Dies In Truck Accident

Charlie Schilb, a member of the Boonville Eagles Ban Johnson baseball team, died of injuries suffered in an accident near Boonville about 4 p.m. Friday. Schilb, 19, had been one of the All-Star selections for the annual Ban Johnson All-Star team to be played at Lexington, Thursday, Aug. 6.

Schilb was named to the team of the Eastern Division All-Stars as an outfielder.

He was driving a gravel truck for the Highway Department and traveling on Missouri Highway 5, about four miles south of Boonville. The State Highway Patrol reported the truck left the highway and overturned.

Schilb was taken to a Boonville hospital where he died about 5:30 p.m. from internal injuries.

He was the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Huston Schilb, a construction superintendent for the Missouri Power and Light Co., in Boonville.

The body was taken to the Goodman-Boller Funeral Home where funeral services will be held at 2 p.m. Monday.

Orioles 5, Athletics 2

KANSAS CITY (AP) — The Baltimore Orioles rallied in the ninth inning for four runs and beat Kansas City 5-2 Saturday night.

Three of the runs scored on Dick Brown's double with the bases loaded. The victory kept the Orioles within four percentage points of the first place the Orioles within four percentage points of the first-place New York Yankees.

Until the ninth Orlando Pena had permitted the Orioles only two hits and held a 2-1 lead on Ed Charles' fifth-inning homer.

Luis Aparicio and Norm Siebern, the two first Orioles to bat in the ninth, both singled to send Pena to the showers. John Wyatt replaced him and Boog Powell singled Aparicio home with the tying run. Brooks Robinson beat out a bunt to fill the bases. Sam Bowens forced Siebern at the plate but Brown then came through with the base-clearing two-bagger to the right field corner.

Siebern's double in the first and Jerry Adair's homer in the third were the only hits Pena allowed until the ninth.

Frank Bertaina, a 20-year-old lefthander up from Elmira of the Eastern League, turned in a six-hitter for the Orioles in his first major league start before he was lifted for a pinch-hitter in the eighth.

Yankees 6, Twins 4

MINNEAPOLIS - ST. PAUL (AP) — Mickey Mantle blasted a 420-foot two-run homer and a long double as the New York Yankees beat Minnesota 6-4 Saturday, tightening their hold on first place in the American League.

Until the ninth, Ralph Terry had a two-hitter going for the Yankees, both homers. Then, with one out, Tony Oliva doubled. After Harmon Killebrew walked, Terry was replaced by Hal Reniff.

A single by Jimme Hall loaded the bases and a walk to Bob Allison forced in the Twins' fourth run. Earl Battey popped up and pinch hitter Johnny Goryl hit into a game-ending force play.

The homers Terry yielded before the ninth accounted for three runs.

Hall hit his 18th in the second inning after a walk to Killebrew and Allison hit his 26th in the seventh with none on.

Mantle's homer, his 21st, followed a single by Tom Tresh in the sixth and put the Yankees ahead 5-2. It was a mighty smash to deep center.

White Sox 9, Senators 8

WASHINGTON (AP) — Singles by Pete Ward and Dave Nicholson followed by Ron Hansen's sacrifice fly in the 10th inning gave the Chicago White Sox a 9-8 victory over Washington Saturday.

Dick Phillips' homer with two out in the ninth had tied the score for the Senators and forced the game into overtime.

The victory nullified a fine performance by Washington's Don Lock, who drove in five runs with his 18th homer, two sacrifice flies and a bases-loaded single.

Nicholson, who batted for Gene Stephens in the eighth, homered off a 3-2 pitch by Frank Kreutzer, putting the Sox in front 8-7.

Stephens had two straight triples for the Sox, driving in two runs in the first inning, and scoring on a double play ball after leading off with a triple in the third.

Reds 6, Cardinals 5

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Rookie Mel Queen, a .171 hitter, capped a five-run seventh with a three-run homer to give Cincinnati a 6-5 victory over St. Louis Saturday.

Five straight hits, including Don Pavletich's double and Marty Keough's pinch single, ruined Bob Gibson of the Cards who took a 3-1 lead into the inning.

Queen, son of former major league pitcher Mel Queen, had hit only one previous homer in the majors.

The Cardinals made it close with two runs in the seventh. Tim McCarver, Charley James and Curt Flood singled in succession against reliefer Bill McCool.

Joey Jay, the Cincinnati starter, improved his record to 6-8. Gibson is 8-9.

NEW YORK (AP) — Catcher Bob Taylor hit a two-run homer in the fifth and scored the other run after he doubled in the seventh Saturday, leading the New York Mets over the Houston Colts 3-2.

The victory was the third straight for the Mets over the Colts. The New Yorkers now have a 6-5 season edge over their fellow expansion team.

Al Jackson went all the way for the Mets, allowing five hits. Both Houston runs came in the first inning on two walks, an infield hit, a fielder's choice and a single by Bob Aspromonte.

In the fifth, Larry Eliot got a double when Houston center fielder Mike White misjudged his drive and Taylor followed with a homer.

Taylor doubled in the seventh, went to third on an infield hit by Roy McMillan off pitcher Gordon Jones' glove, and scored when Jones threw wildly to first.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Bob Bailey scored three runs and slammed out a two-run homer, and Joe Gibbon pitched a eight-hitter Saturday as the Pittsburgh Pirates defeated the San Francisco Giants 6-1.

Gibbon, who won his eighth game, was never in serious trouble.

The Pirates got an unearned run in the third, when Bailey got on board on an error, went scored on a double by Bob Clemente.

Then Bailey started a four-run fourth with a homer that followed a walk to Dick Schofield. Bill Virdon and Clemente followed with singles that chased Giant starter Ron Herbel.

Billy Pierce relieved and gave a two-run triple to Jerry Lynch.

Bailey scored the other Pittsburgh run in the sixth inning, when he walked and came home on a single by Bob Clemente.

Until the ninth the Indians had seemed assured a third straight victory over the Tigers on Lee Stange's four-hit pitching and a fifth inning run.

Brown led off the ninth with a single, went to second on an infield out and scored the tying run on McAuliffe's single to right. McAuliffe went to second on the throw home and scored on Demeter's single to left.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Juan Marichal, the San Francisco Giants' top pitcher with a 15-5 record, underwent extensive examination for a back ailment Saturday at Presbyterian Hospital.

He had been complaining of severe pains.

Tests proved negative and it was hoped he would take his regular turn Monday against the Pittsburgh Pirates in Forbes Field.

Braves 8, Cubs 4

CHICAGO (AP) — Hank Aaron hit relief pitcher Lew Burdette's first pitch in the eighth inning for a home run and the Milwaukee Braves went on to an 8-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs Saturday.

It was Milwaukee's fourth straight victory and sixth in the last seven, and the Cubs' fifth straight less.

Aaron's homer, his 17th, broke a 4-4 tie. The Braves added a run in the eighth on Rico Carty's double, an error and a sacrifice fly, and added two more in the ninth. Wade Blasingame got the victory.

The Cubs had pulled even with three runs in the seventh off starter Denny Lemaster and Reliever Warren Spahn.

Phillies 10, Dodgers 6

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—Tony Gonzalez and John Herrnstein led Philadelphia's 15-hit attack on Don Drysdale and three successors Saturday night as the National League-leading Phillies cuffed the Los Angeles Dodgers 10-6.

The victory lifted the Phils 2½ games in front of the second place San Francisco Giants, who lost to Pittsburgh 6-1.

Gonzalez singled twice and doubled, scored two runs and drove in another. Herrnstein hit two singles and his fifth home run, driving in two runs.

The Dodgers staked Drysdale to a 3-0 lead in the first with the aid of Cookie Rojas' two-runs throwing error. But the Phils snapped back with five runs off Drysdale in the second before knocking him out in a four-run fourth. Herrnstein's homer in the sixth completed the Phils' scoring.

In the second, Clay Dalrymple and Rojas singled and Ruben Amaro doubled, scoring Dalrymple. Infield hits by Johnny Briggs, hitting for starter Jim Bunning, and Gonzalez, brought in two more runs and Wes Covington knocked in the last two with a single.

Ron Perranoski replaced Drysdale in the fourth after Gonzalez doubled and Tommy Davis dropped Richie Allen's liner for an error. Perranowski walked John Callison, loading the bases, and Alex Johnson, batting for Covington, singled home two runs. Herrnstein's infield hit scored Callison and Rojas' sacrifice fly brought in Herrnstein an out later.

Jim Gilliam drove in two Dodger runs with singles in the second and sixth innings. John Roseboro delivered another with a first-inning single and Tommy Davis hit a solo homer, his sixth, in the seventh.

The victory went to 18-year-old Rick Wise, who pitched 4 1-3 innings of relief, allowing two runs and three hits.

Rejection Of Clay-Liston Match Urged

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP)—Rejection of the Cassius Clay-Sonny Liston return match by member commissioners of the World Boxing Association was urged Saturday by a WBA official for the good of boxing and to prove WBA unity.

George Barton, member of the WBA executive and championship committees, said the WBA should demand that Clay's first defense of the heavyweight championship be against Doug Jones of New York.

Liston should fight Eddie Terrell, ranked as the WBA's No. 3 contender, to prove Liston's shoulder is completely healed, Barton said.

Barton, former president of the National Boxing Association, forerunner of the WBA, made his suggestions in a letter to Ed Lassman of Miami Beach, WBA president.

Clay and Liston recently signed to fight this fall. Clay took the title from Liston on a controversial technical knockout Feb. 25 when Liston claimed he had an injured shoulder and could fight no more.

Reds Won't Play Dead

Realism, Toughness Reply To Charge by Republicans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Dean Rusk says it is unrealistic to expect the Russians to "roll over and play dead" when faced with U.S. demands. Besides, he says, the United States can be tough when it has to be.

This declaration by Rusk at a news conference Friday — that realism and toughness are being pursued together — was by way of reply to Republican charges that the administration has been less than forceful in dealing with the Communists.

"It would be unrealistic to suppose they will roll over and play dead on the basis of anything that we say and do that might affect their vital interests," the secretary said.

But when a newsman told Rusk that some Republican critics have been suggesting that the United States would be more successful in dealing with the Soviet Union if it adopted a tougher stance, he quickly replied the United States is "just as tough and just as stubborn as is necessary to protect our vital interests."

"We ourselves would not yield to pressures against our vital interests. We have to be cautious about supposing that others would do the same," he said.

Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona, the Republican presidential nominee, last June charged the administration with a "weak-kneed" foreign policy and last March said, "We are following the same paths of appeasement that we followed in the 1930."

Asked about the forthcoming campaign debate on foreign policy, Rusk said he does not anticipate any significant changes in policy during the next several months.

The main U.S. foreign policies are adopted and approved by the people and their leaders in the broadest sense on a bipartisan basis, he said.

A newsman asked if Goldwater is not committed to basic changes in bipartisan foreign policy.

Rusk said this is something that may emerge in the course of the campaign. "But nevertheless, I think the main lines of American policy are well known and have very strong support throughout the country on a bipartisan basis," he added.

"I would not expect major deviations from those well-established policies," Rusk said.

Johnson Is Inquisitive At Showing

By DOUGLAS B. CORNELL

Despite the vast accomplishment of the Ranger 7 moon shot, it looked for a time as if technical difficulties might prevent the slide show here. For a while, the projector wouldn't work.

The President saw one slide showing a pock-marked ridge in the Sea of Clouds area where Ranger 7 crashed.

He was told that this area must be avoided at all costs in a manned landing — but that it represents only 1 per cent of the area and the other 99 per cent appears to be safe for a landing.

Johnson was bubbling with questions as well as comment. He wanted to know about dust on the moon's surface. And he was assured that the closeup pictures indicated that the dust isn't going to be too much of a problem for the first men who arrive — that it's maybe a foot deep. He was told that some speculation had put the depth at 30 to 40 feet and as high as 1,000 feet.

Johnson brought out that the Ranger 7 project started in 1960 and is costing about $260 million.

"You satisfied with the return on that investment?" Johnson asked.

"Completely satisfied," Newell replied.

"Elated?" Johnson coached.

"Elated," Newell echoed.

Charcoaling Is the Term For Backyard Chefs' Art

Local Pros Tell Secrets Of Success

By Larry Embry

From President Johnson's famous Texas barbecues to the average American backyard, charcoal briquets are really going up in smoke this summer and Sedalians are no exception.

We visited three charcoal chefs recently who were willing to share some of their secrets and one even parted with a sauce recipe.

Maurice Hogan, 602 West Seventh, Sedalia's postmaster, enjoys a reputation as one of the city's best charcoalers and his steak sauce, which he labels "Sauce Maurice," is widely known.

"I wouldn't call myself an expert," Hogan confided modestly. "I've just been at it a long time."

"I think I had one of the first charcoal cookers in Sedalia and I introduced many of my friends to charcoal cooking."

Hogan first started charcoaling in 1949. He obtained a brochure from a Kansas City stove firm and purchased a charcoal cooker and a quantity of charcoal in stick form. The popular charcoal briquets were several years in coming, but have greatly simplified the preparation of an even bed of coals.

But don't call this type of outdoor cookery "barbecuing."

"Let's talk about it right," Hogan corrects. "It's charcoaling, not barbecuing."

Hogan has tried just about everything on the charcoal grill, but beef is his favorite and he has a fine knack with a steak, those who have shared his efforts relate.

One thing all charcoalers concur on is waiting long enough after lighting the fire before starting to cook.

"Don't start until the charcoal is covered with grey ash," says Hogan. "If you start before some of the charcoal will get on to the meat and while it may not hurt the flavor, it will hurt the appearance."

Hogan likes hickory chips for use in smoking pork, ribs, ham or turkey, but his beef never gets the smoke treatment.

The cut of a steak is also important.

"You need a well marbled meat, but I advocate trimming off all excess fat. The fat will only drip and cause the fire to blaze up.

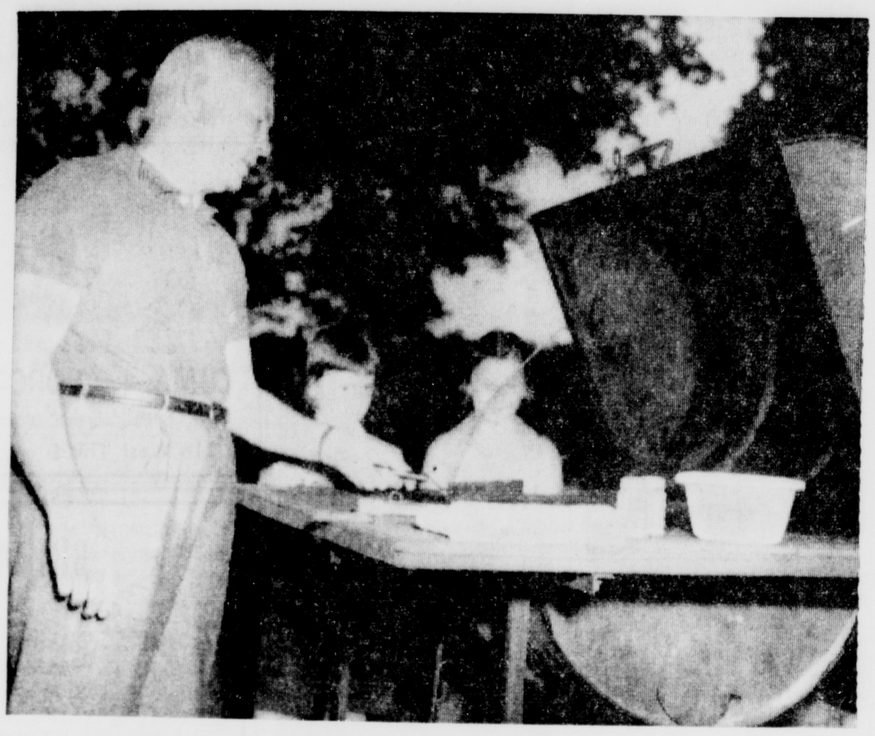

"I've tried all the gimmicks, but with beef I always go back to just plain charcoal cooking. First I sear the steaks on both sides and then let them cook slower on the open charcoal. Beef doesn't need anything but cooking and Sauce Maurice."

If you want to try this tangy sauce, however, you'll have to be Hogan's guest for "Sauce Maurice" is a closely guarded secret.

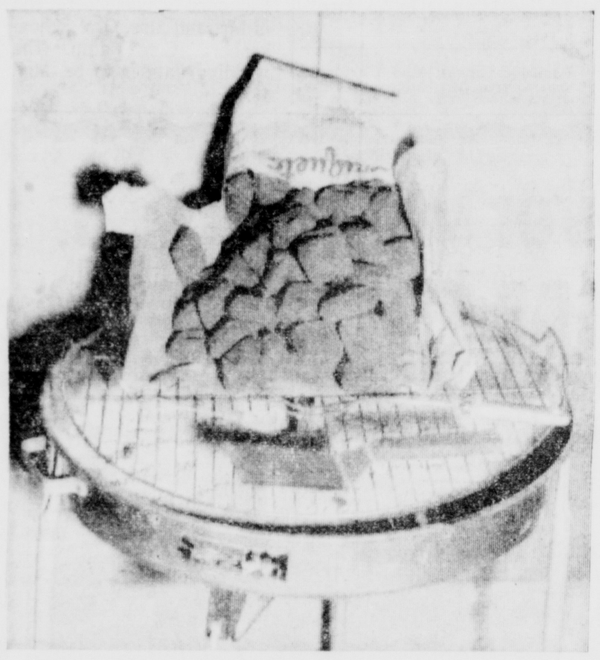

"I could tell anybody what the ingredients are, but I'm the only one who seems to be able to get the right taste," he said.

All the backyard chefs we talked to agreed that chicken is the most difficult of all meats

ONE OF THE BEST—When Maurice Hogan, Sedalia postmaster, presides at the charcoal grill his guests wait with mouths watering for he enjoys the reputation as one of the best charcoalers in town. Two of his daughters, Katie, 7, and Martha Jane, 9, watch their father at work. Hogan, also a member of Sedalia's oldest steak club, is well known for his personal steak sauce, which he calls simply "Sauce Maurice." The sauce recipe is his secret.

BURGERS COMING UP—Richard Esser, 501 Dal Whi Mo, charcoals hamburgers at his home in preparation for a family cookout. Esser is one of many Sedalians who have developed a real liking for charcoal cooked meats. Here he grills a favorite hamburger sandwich composed of two patties of ground beef surrounding an onion slice. Esser and his wife are members of Sedalia's oldest steak club, which meets monthly — rain or shine — for charcoal steaks. (Democrat-Capital photos)

BASIC TOOLS—A bag of charcoal and this open grill represent an investment of just over $5 and are the basic items a backyard chef needs for charcoaling. From this simple grill, you can step up as you desire to models equipped with electric rotary spits, half hoods for a windbreak, full hoods for smoking of meats with the latest and most plush models including blowers, heat guages and even timing devices. On the market now and already in use in at least one Sedalia home is a natural gas grill. The flame in this model heats a simulated briquet surface and provides an indirect cooking heat.

A FORMER CHICKEN CHAMPION—Kenny Schilb, 2408 Dennis Road, won the state fair chicken barbecuing contest in 1960 and placed second in '61 and '62. Charcoalers agree chicken is the most difficult of all meats to grill, but Schilb does so with marked success. His chicken secret is slow cooking over a low fire for a total of an hour and a half.

Comets Seek Show Business Smile

"If you had smiles as bright as your jackets" one of the judges at the American Guild of Music Convention held recently in Louisville, Ky., told the Comets, "you would go far."

That seems to be the one thing their teacher, Miss Ruth Bockelman, who has a radiant smile herself, has not been able to get across to the boys even though she has done an excellent job on their music, of which they have proof — three grand championship trophies in four years, which includes the championship they just brought home.

However, when the photographer simply said: "Smile," they all put on their best showmanship smiles, which they'll all need most in show business, if that is what they go into, and they do have dreams.

David Turner looks exactly like he did when he sat solemnly playing a guitar at the first Sidewalk Bazaar in front of Penney's, except, of course, he has grown up a bit. With him was his brother, Butch, quicker to smile and quicker to talk, now as he was then, and Miss Bockelman, who were also playing guitars. They called themselves The Hit and Miss Trio and that was the forerunner of the Comets.

Performances Begin

Ruth was trying to get them before the public, these talented youngsters of Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Turner, and Butch, the older of the two by a year and perhaps a few months, is really Melvin Turner, Jr. They played everywhere they were asked to play because this was good training, she thought, and they wore white jackets with dark trousers and black or red ties.

David, who is now only 15, started taking lessons from Ruth back in 1957, and Butch, who had thought that playing a guitar wasn't the kind of playing he wanted, changed his mind and began taking lessons six months later. Butch wasn't very old then either, because he reached his 17th birthday on July 25. He plays the steel guitar, bass guitar, and drums, while David has branched out to saxaphone, as well as steel guitar and bass guitar. He has started on piano lessons, too, and went on his own with a music group last summer that did a little touring. That was when he started as an assistant teacher to Ruth, too.

In 1960 Jim Jonson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Jonson, joined the group and is the drummer, but he also plays the guitar. In 1961 Ruth thought they were so good that she entered them in competition at the American Music Guild Convention in which she had participated herself as a budding musician. She was right about them — they were good, for at that convention held in St. Louis, they won the grand championship, which was really an accomplishment since there were probably close to 3,000 youngsters competing.

Comets are Born

Jim, who is now 19, has added just the right touch to the group which by the first Guild convention had become The Comets, not only with his ability as a drummer, but he is blond in contrast to the Turner boys who are dark.

Then in 1962 Danny Rau, son of Mr. and Mrs. Chris Rau, joined The Comets. Danny is dark like the Turners and The Comets decided that Danny might well be taken for a brother, too.

Danny is 16 and very much like his dad, the Old Cottonpicker, quick to make comments and wisecracks on anything and everything. He plays the saxaphone and the year he joined, The Comets went to Chicago, coming home with another grand championship.

By this time they were be-

THE COMETS, who for the third time in four years have won the grand championship in their classification at the annual American Guild of Music Convention, hold trophies they brought home this year, along with many ribbons, from the convention held in Louisville, Ky. They are left to right, front row, Miss Ruth Bockelman, teacher, Danny Rau, 16, son of Mr. and Mrs. Chris Rau; and Pennye Nichols, 18, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Palmer Nichols. Back row, Jim Jonson, 19, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Jonson; Melvin Turner, Jr., 17, and David Turner, 15, son of Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Turner.

One-Man Ice Box 'War'

C. C. Kelder Takes Action After Son Survives Crisis

Things may seem bad and we may be sorry when we read or hear of something happening to someone else, somewhere else, or even in our own home town, but when it comes to someone near and dear we are suddenly awakened to what it really means.

This was the situation C. C. Kelder, St. Joseph, found himself in when his five year old son, Curtis, disappeared and was found five hours and 15 minutes later in an old ice box in his father's junk yard.

There were a number of old ice boxes and refrigerators in the junk yard, and Kelder had read about other children being found dead in them, but he never gave a thought to the danger until his little curly headed blond boy, who had been playing around there, as he did practically every day, was nowhere to be found. When somebody finally looked in the old ice box there was Curtis where he had been trapped, still alive because a pipe that fit a hole in the box let enough air seep through to keep him alive. He was one child in a million who had escaped death from being trapped in an ice box or refrigerator.

Ice boxes became public enemy No. 1, as far as Kelder was concerned, for he realized that all over the country every day little boys and girls were dying in them because people like he never heeded the danger and youngsters, in their innocent play, were unaware that an ice box can well be a tomb.

So grateful that his son had been spared, Kelder started a crusade to make people conscious of the danger. He started first to wage a campaign by mail but it was a flop. Too many letters ended up in the wastebaskets. But he had to do something to awaken the people — mothers of little children, men who were abandoning ice boxes, men like him, who bought the old boxes and let them stand where children could crawl into them.

C. C. Kelder

Seven years ago he began a personal drive that has taken him all over the United States, Hawaii and Alaska and it took him three weeks to arouse interest in Hawaii.

He has cut the clipping from the newspaper every time he has seen one about a child or children, for sometimes there are more than one, being found in an ice box. Usually they are dead, but now and then, like

Mrs. Victor John Van Dyne

Miss Sara Lee Faurot is Bride Of Mr. Victor John Van Dyne

In a setting of white flowers and standing candelabra with arrangements of jade and emerald foliage, in First Christian Church, Columbia, Miss Sara Lee Faurot and Mr. Victor John Van Dyne were married at eight o'clock Saturday evening, Aug. 1. The double ring ceremony was read by the Rev. M. Glynn Burke.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Faurot, Jr., Columbia, and the bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Charles Moorman Van Dyne, 1605 West 13th, and the late Mr. Van Dyne.

Mr. Perry Perrigan was organist.

Escorted to the altar and given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of champagne peau de soie and silk tulle. The fitted bodice was fashioned with brief sleeves and a Sabrina neckline filled with lace, and closed with tiny buttons down the back. The bouffant skirt was appliqued with elaborate Chantilly lace and the peau de soie and lace scalloped overskirt extended into a chapel length train. Her tiered veil of silk illusion was attached to a disc of lace rose petals and she carried a bouquet of champagne colored roses with garlands of ivy.

Mrs. Charles Van Dyne, Jr., Kansas City, was matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Miss Sally Cooper and Miss Alice Allen, Columbia, Miss Nancy Curtis, Springfield, and Miss Mary Ellen Kirtley, Independence.

Bridal attendants were gowned in floor length slim sheaths of pastel blue silk styled with fitted bodices, elbow length sleeves, and low cut necklines in back above floating panels attached with large bows at the wasitlines. They wore matching Dior bows in their hair and carried fuschia asters in garland bouquets with ivy.

Mr. Charles Van Dyne, Jr., served his brother as best man. Groomsmen and ushers were Mr. Frederick Faurot, III, brother of the bride, Mr. Leslie Griffin, Kansas City, Mr. Joseph Ream, Lawrence, Kan., Mr. Clifford Daniel Van Dyne, Mr. Peter Lamy and Mr. James Cooney, Sedalia.

A reception in the Garden Room of Daniel Boone Hotel followed the ceremony. Assisting there were Mrs. Don Faurot, Miss Nell Kitchens, Mrs. Ronold W. Kennedy, Mrs. Hugh Allen, Mrs. A. S. Artley, and the Misses Susie Eynatten, Sally Brown and Iris Shettlesworth.

After a wedding trip to the east, Mr. and Mrs. Van Dyne will be at home in Richmond, Va., where he is employed with Adco Chemical Company, of Sedalia.

The former Miss Faurot was graduated from the University of Missouri, Columbia, where she was a member of Pi Beta Phi sorority. Her husband attended the university and is a member of Beta Theta Pi fraternity.

A celebration with members of their family was held at Tan Tara Resort, Lake of the Ozarks, the weekend of July 24 by Mr. and Mrs. Judson G. Banks, 2009 East Broadway, for their 50th wedding anniversary.

They were joined at the lake by their daughters and their families: Mrs. Thomas D. Williamson and Mr. Williamson, Raytown, Mrs. Earl Mayfield and Mr. Mayfield and daughter, Peggy, Skokie, Ill. Their son, Judson G. Banks Jr. and his family, Kaneohe, Hawaii, were unable to attend. Mr. Banks Jr., an engineer for Pacific Construction Company, Honolulu, is in charge of three large construction projects on the island of Maui.

Mr. and Mrs. Banks have five grandchildren.

The couple was married July 22, 1914, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Peyton Gallagher, Tipton. Mrs. Banks was formerly Miss Beulah Gallagher. Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Banks, Charlotte, N.C., were parents of Mr. Banks.

At the time of their marriage, Mrs. Banks was a teacher at Broadway School. She later was visitor for Missouri Public Welfare for several years. Mr. Banks was employed at the Missouri Pacific Shops when they were married and until his retirement. After retirement, the couple has spent much time traveling.

During the celebration weekend at the lake, Mr. and Mrs. Banks were entertained at two dinners. July 24, they were entertained by their children at dinner at Mai Tai Resort. The following evening a golden wedding dinner was served in their honor at Tan Tara. The table was covered with a gold cloth and centered with a low gold bowl, a gift, filled with gold chrysanthemums. Leis were presented each guest and a tiered wedding cake was served following dinner.

World News Glimpses

PARIS (AP) — France is expected to move two divisions to Southern Germany to bolster allied defense near the Iron Curtain.

Sources said the troops are ready to move as soon as barracks for them are completed.

BONN (AP) — The Krupp industrial empire has won another year's delay of an order t osell half its holdings as a penalty for using slave labor in World War II.

Alfried Krupp, in prison for eight years because his firm had used slave labor, regained his vast iron-steel-coal complex on condition that half be sold. Krupp has claimed there are no buyers for the property.

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Polish citizens laid wreaths today marking the 20th anniversary of Warsaw's anti-Nazi uprising which a Communist official called a mad political maneuver doomed to defeat.

"The London (Polish exile) government and reactionary forces were responsible for creating the situation which enabled the (Nazi) occupants to destroy Warsaw, but it was one of their last acts," Zenon Kliszko, a member of the ruling Communist Politburo, declared.

The uprising took the lives of 10,000 Poles and this city, since rebuilt, was reduced to rubble.

Tough Ship From Civil War Recalled

By DAVID ZINMAN

An air of expectancy hung in the icy November wind sweeping the Boston Navy Yard. A warship was being launched into the Charles River. A reporter who was there that cold day in 1858, later wrote:

"As she touched the water, Miss Lizzie Stringham, daughter of the commandant of the yard, broke a bottle of Connecticut River water across her figurehead: Miss Carrie Downes a bottle of Hartford spring water, and Lt. George H. Preble, a bottle of salt water. And thus, she was nobly christened the Hartford."

The Hartford, a 225-foot, 2,900-ton wooden sloop of war with auxiliary steam power, lost little time in proving her mettle.

After the Civil War erupted, she became the flagship of crusty Rear Adm. David G. Farragut. In 1862, she sailed through a shore bombardment to spearhead the capture of New Orleans.

The South's sea arm still had muscle. To the east, Mobile, Ala., had become a nest for blockade runners. The gulf port defied penetration behind three rows of some 180 mines, called "torpedoes."

Farragut, 63, refused to be intimidated. In the last summer of the war, on Aug. 5, 1864—100 years ago this Wednesday—he sailed his squadron of 14 wooden ships and four metal-hull monitors into the bell-shaped bay.

About 7 a.m., the big cannons of Ft. Morgan—defending the harbor's narrow mouth—opened up. Hot grape and shrapnel sprayed the lead sloops, the Brooklyn and the Hartford.

A torpedo exploded under the Tecumseh, leading the monitors. She sank in two minutes, taking down 113 of her crew of 135.

"Damn the torpedoes!" Farragut is reported to have cried from the rigging where he had climbed to peer over the rolls of smoke. "Full speed ahead!"

The mines didn't go off. Some of the tin torpedoes had rusted.

Now came the toughest challenge. The huge Confederate ironclad Tennessee, built on the lines of the famed Merrimac and reputed to be the most powerful warship afloat, steamed into the midst of the Union fleet.

The Hartford and the Tennessee came at each other and fired broadsides. Thirteen Hartford sailors lay dead or wounded.

But the Tennesee had only three wooden gunboats for support. Out of range of Ft. Morgan's guns Union monitors surrounded the Tennessee, pouring shot after shot into her.

In a few minutes, the Tennessee lay helpless as a log.

When World War I broke out, the Navy had no place for a sloop. The Hartford became an obscure station ship at Charleston, S.C., where she was decommissioned in 1926.

Detriorating, forgotten, she stayed in Charleston until 1938 when the Navy reduced her to a relic and sent her to the Norfolk naval shipyard.

The old Hartford was now the last remaining vessel of the civil war. There was hope some patriotic group would restore her.

The inevitable happened one winter night in 1957. The Hartford settled to the bottom in 25 feet of water.

The end was swift. Congress at last approved her destruction.

Diplomatic Troubleshooter

WASHINGTON (AP)—If a crisis appears threatening enough to Washington, one of George Ball's two bosses is almost certain to say, "Let's send George."

In the last six months the burly, white-haired undersecretary of state, a fast moving man at 200 pounds, has sallied forth from Washington on a half dozen missions of mercy. Some were real errands of desperation.

"I've become a champion of lost causes," Ball said before one recent journey to Europe.

As the administration's ranking diplomatic troubleshooter, he has had a lion's share of tough cases; some came by assignment from President Johnson or Secretary of State Dean Rusk. Some by his own choice. Risks of failure do not worry him. Despite his wry barb at himself he's never been known to give up a cause as lost.

"If you always weigh it for a sure success you'd never accomplish anything," Ball said in a recent interview. He does not believe, any more than any other experienced diplomat, that all crises come equipped with instant solutions if only the right button is pushed.

His philosophy is that they can be arrested short of disaster and then moved towards settlement if men are persuaded to act in their own best interest.

To exert such persuasion takes a lot of talking as well as maneuvering. Ball is adept at both.

The 54-year-old official—lawyer, economist, diplomat and advisor to presidents—is not only a kind of doctor of international ailments. He is also one of the most influential men in the top levels of American foreign policy making.

Twice within a year, troubleshooter Ball has used emergency measures to avert a war between Greece and Turkey over Cyprus, talking the Turks out of carrying through invasion plans.

During extended talks in his eighth-floor office in the State Department, Ball explained his purpose in so often going abroad to look into trouble.

"What I've tried to do," he said, "is tackle some of the hard problems head on and see whether through conversations in depth I could improve our understanding of the issues and the other fellow could get a better insight into the issues as we see them.

"Missions like these never result in conspicuous successes. But they often help to avoid conspicuous failures."

Ball's reputation among his colleagues is that of a doggedly determined as well as extremely skillful negotiator. They consider him able to cool down a quarrel with a difficult friend like Charles de Gaulle, or pull allies like Greece and Turkey back from the brink of war over Cyprus—if anybody can.

But he is considerably more than a far-flying negotiator, clever in maneuver and experienced in stratagem. He is No. 3 man in the development and direction of U.S. policy, subject only to the President and secretary of state.

He was in the inner group of men who determined policy in the Cuban missile crisis in 1962. He is the alter ego of Secretary Dean Rusk, and the two men share the same points of view on foreign policy questions.

Ball, like Rusk, is a frequent visitor to the White House office. The night Johnson came back from Dallas, Tex., following the assassination of President Kennedy, Rusk was out of the country. Ball, along with other top government officials, met the new chief executive at Andrews Air Force Base. Ball was one of the men Johnson invited to travel with him back to the White House by helicopter, then enter into the first discussions on the work of the new administration.

Among Washington insiders, it is now being said that if Johnson has to appoint a new secretary of state any time soon, Ball will be one of the men most seriously considered.

Ball was one of the central figures in the high drama of the Cuban crisis in October 1962, though as has generally been true of him, his activities were never publicized.

Ball said that from the beginning there were only two choices open to the President in that confrontation. One was to go to war immediately and the other was to make a more limited application of force such as the blockade which he actually put into effect around Cuba.

Ball started his career as an attorney but he has spent much time working with economic problems in the international field. His first job in the Kennedy administration was undersecretary of state for economic affairs. He described himself "as a lonely lawyer fallen among economists."

In December 1961, in the course of a major shakeup in State Department assignments, Ball moved up a notch, replacing Chester Bowles as the principal undersecretary of state.

Ball believes that the world is passing through a phase of rapid change in which nothing can be taken for granted and hardly any future development can be automatically ruled out.

Of the cold war, Ball told a lawyers' meeting sometime ago that it has so far covered but the briefest moment in the long history of man and he added: "There is no historical inevitability that fixes the cold war as a permanent aspect of the world scene."

Jaycee Wives Will Support Jaycees in Bid

Jaycee Wives met July 27 at Bothwell Hotel with Mrs. Stan Gunter, president, presiding. It was decided to give Jaycees full support in its bid at the Sikeston state board meeting to host the state winter board meeting.

Mrs. Walt Schroeder asked for volunteers to help in the Children's Therapy Center Missouri State Fair concession.

A letter from Judge C. Berry Elliott of the Pettis County Court regarding status of Civil Defense was read and discussed.

It was announced Jaycees and Jaycee Wives will have a joint board meeting Aug. 6.

Jaycees have asked that the wives assist in entertaining the Miss Missouri winner who is to visit Sedalia Aug. 13.

Plans for the Aug. 16 Jaycee family picnic were discussed. The picnic will be potluck. Each family will be contacted as to the number attending and the dish to be brought. Jaycees will serve barbecued beef and will supply plates and eating utensils.

It was announced a farewell party will be held for Mary Laschewitch who moves from Sedalia the first part of August.

A report was given on the recent District V meeting at Richards-Gebaur Air Force Base by Mrs. Larry Embry. It was announced the August Sedalia board meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Phil Lonien, 611 West Third.

Children's Carnival Nets $20 for Charity

A check for $20 has been sent to Muscular Dystrophy Association from Daryl McKinney, 12 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Elwood McKinney, 1301 East Seventh. The money was netted from a carnival held in the McKinney yard July 24.

Young McKinney was assisted by his older brother, Doug, and the following neighborhood children: Allen and Sheral Fisher, Frankie Patterson, Belinda McCune, Gayle and Robert Meyer, Mike, John and Penny White, Jeff Hanning and Ann McKinney.

Pepsi, Cola and Coca- Cola Bottling Companies donated soft drinks for the carnival.

Charcoaling Is Term to prepare on the open coals.

But Kenny Schilb, 2408 Dennis Road, a laundry manager and insurance agent, has the skill of making chicken cookery look easy.

"I try to charcoal almost every Sunday," says Schilb. "Cooking is a hobby with me and it's relaxing."

Schilb won the state fair chicken barbecuing contest in 1960, took second in 1961 and 1962, but was unable to enter in 1963. He is expected to be back in competition this August.

"Getting the fire right is the most important thing on chicken," Schilb observed. "You need a real slow fire."

He bastes the chicken halves for an hour and 15 minutes with a mixture of melted butter, vinegar and garlic. The last 15 minutes, after the fire has burned down, he adds his own personal finishing sauce.

"I think the reason the Agriculture Department uses chickens for the fair contest is that its the hardest meat to barbecue. Chicken is a dry meat and the slower you cook it the better."

Schilb summed up this slow-cooking secret in words he says were passed along to him by an old colored fellow.

"When that chicken looks like he ain't doing nothin' that's when he's doing best," was the Negro's observation.

Schilb's final chicken sauce has a catsup base and includes ingredients of chili sauce, red pepper, vinegar, brown sugar, Worcestershire sauce, finely chopped onion, chili powder, dry mustard, salt, paprika, tabasco sauce and salad oil. But his combination of these is a secret only his taste buds and hours of slow cooking can answer.

"I make this up to taste and don't measure anything. It takes about four hours to cook over a low fire because of the catsup base."

Schilb has turned out steaks, ribs, hams and even stuffed turkey on his grill, but one beef dish he classifies as "really delicious" is charcoaled boneless rump roast, which has been marinated overnight.

"Baste the roast often with the marinating mixture and the roast when sliced is uniform and delicious throughout."

Dick Esser, 501 Dal Whi Mo, a local package store dealer, says he is no connoisseur on the charcoal grill, but his family still takes to his efforts with verve.

"I do mostly hamburgers for the family. One way we really like is to put an onion slice between two patties of beef and then charcoal. I think hamburger takes on the charcoal flavor better than anything.

"Steak, I like to sear on both sides with a hot fire, then douse the fire and cook slowly. I sprinkle water on the steak as it grills and this keeps it more moist."

Esser also has tried the various wood flavorings such as hickory and bourbon oak chips, but prefers just plain charcoal.

His favorite basting sauce is a sweet sauce and he was first introduced to it on ribs, but he says it is "good on anything." The recipe calls for ¼ cup salad oil, ¾ cup chopped onion, 1 clove chopped garlic, 1 cup brown sugar or honey, 1 cup catsup, 1 cup wine vinegar, ½ cup Worcestershide sauce, 1 tablespoon dry mustard, 1½ teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon oregano, 1 teaspoon black pepper, ½ teaspoon thyme and ½ cup vermouth.

Esser and Hogan, incidentally, are members of Sedalia's oldest steak club, which meets the third Thursday of each month at the Catholic Community Center. Members take turns at the charcoal grill and the club meets to enjoy steaks winter and summer. Hogan and Esser recall charcoaling when it was eight degrees below zero and even in a heavy rain.

Returning briefly to charcoaling chickens, Hogan suggests a lemon juice base rather than the vinegar and butter combination.

"Chicken is difficult and I have had some real ruins with it," he recalls. "But I've found that if I put on a baste of lemon juice, water, salt and pepper and baste constantly I get better success. I think the butter in the vinegar mixture tends to char the chicken too soon."

The finishing sauce goes on in the last 15 minutes as usual. Hogan uses frozen concentrated lemon juice for his basting mixture.

Transforming the American male into a charcoal chef is a merchandising success story probably unequalled in business circles, but the housewife also benefits because she draws some relief from hot summer - time cooking chores. And if she is really successful in encouraging hubby, he may keep the charcoal grill smoking even in the winter.

Smell something cooking, girls?

Keler Takes Action

Curtis, they have been rescued in time.

From his efforts, Missouri has a state law, amendment 564,665, which makes discarding ice boxes with latches a misdemeanor. Thirty-eight states have such a law.

It takes only a few minutes to remove the four screws of the latch, he pointed out, and this prevents the danger.

"The Lord spared my boy," Kelder said, "and I feel that the least I can do is to show my gratitude.

Kelder has had many trials in his life. Born in Pella, Ia., he left home when he was nine because the family had nothing to live on — his father could not make enough to keep them and the boy was hungry. He first worked on a farm but that didn't even buy his clothes, so when he heard of a circus in a nearby city he went there and got a job watering elephants. Water boys were hard to get, so the man that had the elephants kept changing them on him every time he went for water and he thought that one elephant he was supposed to bring water to certainly did use a lot of water. He learned later he watered 24 elephants not just one.

One of the clowns took him under his wing and he stayed with the circus seven years, after which he did many things. He even owned a cafe, working up from dishwasher to owner of the cafe.

Then he got married and settled down in St. Joseph where he opened his business with the promotion line: "I buy anything." His business grew and was so unusual that it has been written up in 42 national magazines.

Kelder, now 72, is retired — from his business, that is, but not from trying to sell people on the idea that something should be done about old discarded ice boxes.

Now two months of the summer he spends traveling around the country with the boy who inspired the campaign. They sleep in the car and stay as long in a town as they feel there is a need to, and so far this summer have visited 67 towns. When his son cannot go with him to drive he goes by jet, and makes special trips to places when he is needed.

When somebody asked him how much it cost him to wage this crusade that has been going on for the past seven years he replied: "I'll take the fifth amendment on that—but I know this, if it has saved the life of just one little boy, it has been worth it."

And yet, with all his campaigning, with the law listing this as a misdemeanor in 38 states including Missouri, he and his son counted 31 old discarded ice boxes from the Ozarks to Sedalia.

Some places have had many children die in ice boxes, other communities have had only a few, or none. Sedalia belongs in the latter group, in fact the entire area around Sedalia seems to have been fortunate that there have been no ice box tragedies through a number of years if any at all around here. That does not mean, however, that it couldn't happen here, that it couldn't happen just as it did to Curtis, and it is well that those who might have old ice boxes or refrigerators take time to take out the four little screws that hold the latch and perhaps save the life of a child.

YES
I am a Candidate for SHERIFF of Pettis County

Because of my personal finances, I will not be able to spend a lot of money for advertising and my campaign will necessarily be conducted on a "pauper-campaign" basis.

Almost everyone in Pettis County knows me, my family and my record as Chief of Police. You also know that if I am elected to the office of Sheriff, I will show no favoritisms, but will administer fair, impartial, and just law enforcement.

Your vote and support will be appreciated.

I am a native of Pettis County, son of Rollie Thomas. I graduated in 1943 from Smith-Cotton High School, entered the Marine Corps, serving three years in the South Pacific.

Discharged in August, 1946, I entered the University of Missouri that fall and graduated in 1950 with a B.S. in Business and Public Administration.

I feel my business education in accounting, finance, sales, management, insurance, banking, business law, economics and related courses has been a big help in today's business.

It has given me a balanced background together with present farming experience, to represent this county in the State Legislature.

Primary, Aug. 4th

Pettis County needs and is entitled to a full time State Representative in the legislature. It is not a part time job, but one that should require the full time and attention of the Representative if he is to give Pettis County and its citizens full representation.
If elected to this important position, I will not divide my time between the business of the legislature and any other endeavor. My only concern will be the welfare of all the citizens of this county.
I will always be available to meet with Pettis Countians and to discuss problems regarding legislative matters. I will support any measures which are in the interest of the majority of the people of our county and state. I will oppose any legislation in favor of special groups. I will use my influence to make sure that any public money is wisely spent and will oppose any increase in taxes. Why Pay Taxes?
THERE IS A BETTER WAY!
FACT:
Additional revenue is an increasing problem on our state and local levels. More and higher taxes seem to be the legislators' only answer. Missouri cigarettes, sales, liquor and gas taxes have all increased during the past four years.
QUESTION:
ARE MORE-HIGHER TAXES REALLY THE BEST ANSWER?
ANSWER:
NO!
ALTERNATIVE:
The alternative is a proven fact in 22 states such as Nebraska, Arkansas, Colorado, Kentucky, New Hampshire, New York, Illinois and others, where government and state controlled legalized wagering has provided $ Millions in additional revenue and reduced the burden of taxation.
We all know that gambling will exist in one form or another. Why not put to good use the $ Billions of untaxed dollars from illegal wagering now going to the underworld. Would you rather have a $2.00 bet on a horse or pay $2.00 to your collector for taxes.
BENEFITS:
1. Revenues would reduce the tax burden.
2. Revenues would provide expanded and improved old age, mental health and school programs.
3. Revenues to pay a veterans bonus, such as were given in many other states.
4. Churches and charitable organizations can use bingo for fund raising purposes.
5. Tourist revenues from the thousands attracted to the state during the racing season.
6. Under a legalized gambling system people would not be able to bet on credit.
SOLUTION:
VOTE MILTON MORRIS FOR GOVERNOR OF MISSOURI. LEGALIZED GAMBLING IS HIS PLATFORM AND THE DEMOCRATIC NOMINATION FOR GOVERNOR IS HIS GOAL.
REMEMBER
MILTON MORRIS
FOR GOVERNOR OF MISSOURI
ON THE LEGALIZED GAMBLING TICKET.

Comets Seek Smile

coming pretty well known locally and it was that year that first played at the Missouri State Fair in the Farm Bureau tent, insisting that it was 110 in the shade and they were glad they were in the tent instead of outside where it was still hotter.

Place Nationally

As soon as one Music Guild convention is over they start practicing for the next, but somehow they didn't quite make the grade to the championship in 1963 when they went to Buffalo, N. Y., but they came home with second place and several nice trophies and ribbons, as they did before.

That year, though, David, Jim and Ruth went to the Mid America Music Association in Omaha where they came home with more honors.

They played again at the fair, for various organizations, in fact almost every organization, entertainments of all kinds in the area including pie suppers, and this past year have spread consideraly playing places in a radius of 100 miles. By this time they felt they needed someone at the piano and in January they succeeded in talking Pennye Nichols, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Palmer Nichols, into playing with them. Pennye is an attractive blond girl and a very good musician, as she proved at the 1964 American Guild of Music convention, for she was praised highly not only as an accompanist but for her piano solos, and her part with The Comets. It wasn't Pennye's idea to be a musician, however, it was her mother's, who brought her many times in from play, crying, to practice.

Range 100 Miles

The Comets played for prom after prom at high schools in that 100 mile area.

The boys observed that you can tell a lot about people from watching them dance. The minute they start dancing you know what they are like. They never made quite clear what they meant or how they could tell about people, but these young philosophers seemed to think they knew about people by the way they danced.

They were far off, they admitted, on schools, however. When they were asked to play for a prom in a small town which had a small school they decided that these kids would be squares. They didn't think they would be much — but they were fooled. Their dress and their dancing was right up to now and so were the kids. On the other hand they were asked to play at a good sized town where the school building was new and very modern. That was the way they thought the kids would be — but they weren't. Everything seemed to be modern but the kids — they couldn't even dance.

The Comets decided to do something a little more spectacular, this year, so they changed from white jackets to bright red ones. With these they wear black tuxedo trousers, pleated shirts and black ties. They really look the part — but — as the judge commented — they need those bright professional smiles to go with the jackets.

"I'm shy" said David, when the subject came up.

"I'm modest," commented Danny pulling the lapel of his coat up to hide his fice a bit—"I've got personality."

'Discover' Girls

This year they thought they had more fun at the convention than before.

"They found out about girls," said Ruth.

"Oh, we knew about them before," Butch said quickly, but it was plain to see that the interest had increased considerably.

For an organized group they seem to be about an unorganized as it is possible to be. They are glad they all live within a distance that they don't have to pay for 'phone calls or they never could afford to pay bills to get ready for playing somewhere. They call each other and make all their plans, then somebody thinks of something else and they have another conference by telephone and change everything completely. This goes on and on. Most of their practicing is done at Shaw's Music Co.

They have worked together so long, however, that things go along smoothly whether anything is planned beforehand or not. Two of them suddenly decided that they would enter a duet at the convention. They rushed around, entered, got their guitars and did other things they needed to do in preparation only minutes before the contest — went into the contest practically with their tongues hanging out, deciding at the last minute what to play and certainly having no time to practice. And what did they get? A ribbon and the note on their score sheet: "Well prepared."

The first night at the convention they got a job playing and made themselves a little extra money.

Somebody dropped a water balloon which hit the windshield of Jim's car and broke it, and somebody else, not with their group, accidently dropped an accordian out of one of the top hotel windows.

"They picked up the pieces with tweezers," Danny remarked.

Like Girls — Music, Food

All of their get-togethers are not to play or practice, for as Butch put it — "We like music and girls and food and girls—." So food, plays an important part and they have barbecues at each others homes.

"You see we live on a farm," said Butch.

"We live in the country," Danny said, "but we don't live on a farm — we — ah — live on an estate."

"An estate," Butch repeated—"What do you mean estate—"

Anyway, Jim's dad, they agree, gets the purple ribbon—that's outstanding — for barbecuing They really like what he cooks, anything he cooks.

So they go first one place and then another with all of their families, to have these cookouts.

Appreciate Help

"We owe a lot to the people of this community," Butch kept insisting. "Everybody has been wonderful to us and we certainly do appreciate their help."

And so The Comets have tied their wagon to a star — a bright star with a brilliant light behind it — like the one from which they got their name.

Franco-German Friendship Tapering Off, Report Says

By CARL HARTMAN

BONN, Germany (AP) — The attachment between the French and West German governments has been cooling off ever since Konrad Adenauer and Charles de Gaulle signed their treaty of friendship 18 months ago.

A few days ago De Gaulle publicly attacked the West Germans as uncooperative and too respectful of U.S. leadership. Chancellor Ludwig Erhard's government replied angrily that its policy is independent of both France and America.

The Paris-Bonn match was always the kind that makes the neighbors ask what she can see in him and what he can see in her.

France has been Germany's "hereditary enemy" for centuries. Across the Rhine, French parents still make small children behave by threatening them with "Les Boches."

Adenauer and De Gaulle, remembering invasions and occupations, wanted to end all that. To them the United States and the Soviet Union were annoying newcomers on the European scene, and even Britain was an outsider. They saw no way to unite Europe except on the basis of a solid alliance between France and Germany, in their day Europe's two strongest powers.

But there were rifts that both sides tried — unsuccessfully — to keep in the background. De Gaulle wants to accept the boundaries that the Communists have drawn for Germany in the East. No West German politician could go along.

Just before the treaty was signed, De Gaulle publicly blackballed Britain for membership in the European Common Market — a membership many West Germans felt pledged to.

De Gaulle was withdrawing his forces from the Atlantic Alliance, setting up his own nuclear air arm and refusing to join an Atlantic nuclear force. All these developments met strong criticism in West Germany, even within Adenauer's own party and government.

Six months after the treaty was signed it became clear that Erhard, a symbol of this criticism, would succeed Adenauer in the fall. Adenauer was quitting not only because he was 87. He opposed Erhard's succession and would have been glad to stay on. He was leaving because his Christian Democratic party had lost its clear majority in the 1961 election, and the price he had to pay for support from outside the party was a pledge to retire.

Erhard and the men around him — all younger than Adenauer and De Gaulle — seem more concerned with taking an effective part in the power conflicts of today than in reconciling the hatreds of yesterday. They are impressed with the fact that the United States and Britain keep nine divisions of troops on the continent as a pledge of their involvement in its affairs.

The American and British troops, the U.S. atomic submarines, the U.S. 6th Fleet in the Mediterranean, the great complex of American nuclear weapons—all these seem to Erhard and his supporters the best guarantee of security they can get.

They do not want to endanger it by getting too close to De Gaulle. They see no advantage in teaming their own 11 divisions, lacking nuclear weapons, with the small and repeatedly vanquished French army which has still to get its first H-bomb.

Before the U. S. Federal Bureau of Investigation enters a kidnaping case, 24 hours must elapse.

VOTE FOR X WARREN E. HEARNES

DEMOCRAT — FOR GOVERNOR

ON TUESDAY, AUGUST 4th

THE KANSAS CITY TIMES,
TUESDAY, JULY 7, 1964

STAN MUSIAL FOR HEARNES

By Henry Clay Gold
(The Star's Jefferson City Correspondent)

Jefferson City—James T. Blair III, son of the late governor of Missouri, was named chairman yesterday of a St. Louis metropolitan citizens committee which is supporting Warren E. Hearnes, secretary of state, for the Democratic nomination for governor.

Blair said the state needs a change in government in Jefferson City and Hearnes is the man to bring about the change. Hearnes compiled an outstanding voting record as a member of the Legislature on such matters as education, mental health and industrial development, Blair said.

By calling for a change in Jefferson City, Blair aligned himself against most long-time party leaders here and throughout Missouri who are supporting Hilary A. Bush for governor and who supported the late James T. Blair, jr., in his successful campaign for governor in 1956.

Among the executive committee of the group headed by Blair, who is a St. Louis insurance executive and sportsman, is Stan Musial, former baseball player for the St. Louis Cardinals and now director of President Johnson's physical fitness program.

Musial said he still does not have any political ambitions for himself, but does have an interest in the quality of persons who seek and hold political office. He said he is supporting Hearnes on the basis of his experience as a legislator and as secretary of state.

PLEASANT HILL TIMES

A Ground Swell for Hearnes

Warren Hearnes seems to be moving ahead in the Democratic race for governor.

It is apparent here in Cass County, only a few miles from Hilary Bush's residence on State Line road in Kansas City. Reports from throughout Missouri indicate the Hearnes trend is general.

One reason is that, as the campaign proceeds, more citizens are becoming acquainted with Hearnes himself and with his record. The candidate, now secretary of state, has won distinction in roles that have prepared him for Missouri's highest office.

Hearnes is a West Point graduate, an air force officer in World War II, a lawyer, served five terms in the General Assembly, was majority floor leader in 1957 and 1959, and was given the St. Louis Globe-Democrat award for meritorious service as "the most effective House member in debate." As a legislator, he sponsored measures on mental health and education.

Another reason, perhaps, for the groundswell to Hearnes is his willingness to discuss issues specifically, without hedging. Hearnes has spoken out on taxes, industrial development, civil rights, gubernatorial succession, penal reform, conflicts of interest, highway safety, bond vote requirements, urban affairs, and the nonpartisan court plan.

This newspaper does not necessarily endorse all these stands, but it admires Hearnes for his candor. In an era when many office-seekers hide behind cliches and generalities, Hearnes's attitude is refreshing.

And there is no doubt that Hearnes's attack on the "Establishment" is proving effective. Missourians are wondering out loud why the "Establishment"—another term for the Central Missouri Trust Co., of Jefferson City—is so earnestly supporting Mr. Hearnes's principal opponent.

Cass County is only a whoop and a holler away from Kansas City, but we predict a surge of ballots here marked for Warren Hearnes.

EXPERIENCE COUNTS

14 YEARS EXPERIENCE in STATE GOVERNMENT

Warren Hearnes was elected to the Missouri House of Representatives in 1950. He was re-elected for four more terms.

As a legislator, he helped sponsor a majority of measures resulting in better public school education, including the Teacher's Retirement System — considered one of the best in the country. He was floor manager in the House for all the progressive mental health measures passed from 1957 to 1961—and was principal author of Amendment No. 4, which allows municipalities to issue bonds for industrial development.

In 1957 he was elected majority floor leader of the House, a post he held until 1961. He became Secretary of State in January of 1961 and has served Missouri with distinction since that time.

Warren Hearnes is a graduate of the United States Military Academy at West Point, where he received a B.S. degree. He also graduated from the University of Missouri with an A. B. and L. L. B. He has been in private law practime and is a veteran.

Whether or not your name has appeared in other political advertising favoring another candidate — your vote would be greatly appreciated by Warren E. Hearnes.

Hearnes Pledges 'Absolutely No Tax Increase'

SHELBYVILLE, MO. (AP)—Secretary of State Warren Hearnes pledged Monday night there will be "absolutely no tax increase" if he is elected Governor.

"I think obsolete services can be so eliminated and new programs so streamlined that additional services can be provided without additional employes and additional tax levies," He said in a speech prepared for a Democratic rally.

Mr. Hearnes also set out these planks in his platform as he campaigned for the Democratic nomination for Governor.

Creation of regional planning offices for areas of like interest and problems.

Technical and vocational schools to provide skilled labor and diversification of state colleges so the "average person" can obtain the skills and education needed to get jobs.

Lower tuition costs for state supported schools as soon as possible.

"I propose that Missouri be a leader and set the standards insuring fair employment privileges to everyone regardless of race, color, creed or age."

More women in politics and government.

A state department of urban affairs.

Better roads and a strong drunk driver law.

A strong conflict of interest and disclosures bill.

Mr. Hearnes urged the people of Shelby County to join in promoting tourism and recreation in connection with the new $66,000,000 Joanna Dam on the Salt River scheduled for a start in 1965.

Candidate Switches Support to Hearnes

Mrs. Margaree Klein, 1143 West Parkedge Lane, Univsrsity City, Democratic Committeewoman of Creve Coeur Township, announced Sunday she has switched her support from Lt. Gov. Hilary A. Bush to Secretary of State Warren Hearnes for Democratic nominee for Governor.

Mrs. Klein said she recast her support after studying the positions of the two candidates on issues affecting the metropolitan area, including majorities required for the passage of bond issues, legislative reapportionment, state penitentiary reforms and civil rights.

She is a candidate for State Representative from the St. Louis County Seventh Legislative District, opposing Jack J. Schramm and incumbent Representative Irwin R. Zwibelman.

Hemingway Works Still In the Mill

By WILLIAM KENNEDY

NEW YORK (AP)—Mary Hemingway, a small, lively woman in a plain blouse and flowered toreador pants, her blonde hair going gray, puttered around her small kitchen preparing a "lazy" meal of madrilene soup, steak and spinach for three expected dinner guests.

While she puttered she talked about the unpublished work of her late husband, one of the great writers of the 20th Century.

That work is the chief business of her life now, and she says the world can expect to see more of Ernest Hemingway's writings, but not much more.

"Miss Mary," which is what the writer called his fourth wife, pursues her task here, in a city Hemingway loathed abundantly. The loathing is perpetuated by his widow.

"As a place to live it stinks beyond measure," she says. "It's all the things sensible people don't want: Overcrowded, not enough space or time for proper reflection, and the housekeeping is frightfully bad compared to London or Paris."

But here she stays, in a Madison Avenue penthouse remote—except for a view of Central Park treetops—from the natural world her husband wrote about s oeloquently. Yet that natural world and the man who lived in it with her are memorialized within the apartment at every turn.

Mary Hemingway has 17 years of such memories of life with the novelist. Now she estimates she will spend the next 10 years entwined not only with his memory but with his works, about 50 pounds of unpublished, fragmented, and often scrambled writings.

Besides becoming the sole beneficiary of Hemingway's $1,400,000 estate upon his death, she also became his literary executor. Her first task was preparing for publication the book he completed just before he died, "A Moveable Feast," a reminiscence of Paris days, which is now a best seller.

"Ernest was orderly inside of his head," she says. "But not in any other way. He never dated anything and he frequently renumbered pages. Much of the work is not labeled, and characters come in and you don't know where they belong."

Mrs. Hemingway works on the manuscripts in the office of a New York bank, but she won't say which bank. So far, the only works she believes are publishable are some short stories, some poetry and perhaps a novel.

The stories include three infantry sketches from World War II and one story set in Upper Michigan, the locale for many of Hemingway's early stories.

The poetry, she says, "may never be published in a book, maybe there isn't enough. But there are two or three poems that ought to see the light of day. They will probably be published in a literary magazine, which I think is the most appropriate place for them."

But the novel she is uncertain about. It's a long one, set in the Caribbean during World War II. It's based on Hemingway's experiences on his yacht, which was rigged to hunt German submarines.

The novel, she explains, is all that exists of an enigmatic, long-awaited trilogy Hemingway once said he was writing. About 10 years ago he told critic Carlos Baker, who is now at work on a biography of Hemingway, that he was working on the long novel whose triple subject was to be the land, sea and the air.

"He did the section on the sea, which is the one set in the Caribbean," she says. "The land section would have come from his experience (as a war correspondent) with the 22nd Infantry Regiment in the second war. He was with them from the Normandy landings to the following spring."

And the air section? "He loved flying during the war with the RAF (British Royal Air Force)," she says. "I think he intended using that experience to do a novel on air warfare."

Mrs. Hemingway also has found two other long works among the unpublished manuscripts—"The Dangerous Summer," a book on bullfighting partially published in Life magazine, and an untitled novel set in southern France in the 1920's. But these probably will not be published, nor will an abundance of unfinished sketches. All the unpublished work will be given to the John F. Kennedy Memorial Library.

"Ernest decided not to publish 'Dangerous Summer'," Mrs. Hemingway says, "and I wouldn't dream of publishing anything if he himself didn't approve. I would never let anyone fool around and make any but the most simple changes in the other work, which I think he would have revised."

"I lived with him for the last 17 years of his life, and I know what he did. If he didn't publish something, that was because he felt it wasn't good enough to publish. As long as I'm alive I'll do only what would enhance his reputation, and do nothing to diminish it."

Much of her time now is spent attending to the miscellany of fame: Turning down all requests (about 70 so far) to speak to women's clubs around the nation, corresponding with translators and foreign publishers of Hemingway's works, occasional television appearances. She also continues to visit the old places—Paris, London, Africa, the Caribbean, and Ketchum—and do some of the old things: The fishing and the hunting.

But Africa is far away, and Ketchum is lonely. It's also the place where, on July 2, 1961, Ernest Hemingway died of the self inflicted shotgun wound his wife insisted then was an accident.

"I've changed my mind about that," she says now. "It was such an enormous shock. I couldn't conceive of it being anything else, nor face it."

Now she has faced it. She also has faced life without the man. About that she says: "I try to learn as I go along. But if you want one word for it, it's worthless."

"Breathe deeply and say Ah - love you!" says Tammy, the hilarious Miss from Mississippi. The doctor who appears worried about the state of his heart is Peter Fonda. Tammy is played by Sandra Dee. And the picture is "Tammy and the Doctor" . . . all about a very infectious kind of heart-trouble called boy-meets-girl. Starts tonite at the 50 Drive-in Theatre!

Jack Lemon's enthusiastic celebration of a promotion make it necessary for Dorohty Provine as his wife and Romy Schneider, right, as the girl next door, to come to his rescue. The Rev. V. Linnebur On Leave From Peru

The Rev. Father Vincent Linnebur, Nasca, Peru, arrived July 23 to visit a month with his mother, Mrs. Leona Linnebur, Tipton. Father Linnebur has been with missions in Peru since last July.

George Still Active After Gracie Quit

By BOB THOMAS
AP Movie-Television Writer

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—"When Gracie retired, I went to work," says George Burns, 68, and working harder than a beatle.

Burns had just returned from five weeks in Nevada where he regaled the dice throwers with songs and patter. He reported to Warner Bros. to begin his starring role in "Wendy and Me," a television series which he also is producing and helping to write.

In addition, he is producing and supervising the scripts of another Warners series, "No Time for Sergeants." And he continued overseeing "Mister Ed," which he helped create.

If he is overworked, he doesn't show it.

"I'm doing what I love to do," Burns said. "Retire? Never. I was retired during all those years I worked with Gracie. It's no wonder she wanted to quit; she did all the work. If we had 35 pages of dialogue, she had to memorize 25 pages of it. All I did was say, 'Tell me about your brother,' and that would start her off."

Burns told how he found a new home at Warner Bros.

"The studio had Connie Stevens, whom I greatly admired, and I had the idea for a series, which Warners liked. The story has me, George Burns, buying an apartment building to give me an audience for my singing. One of the tenants is Connie, who plays an airlines stewardess. I weave in and out of the stories, talk to the audience and sing a song now and then.

"J. L. Warner was so pleased with how 'Wendy and Me' turned out that he asked me to take over 'No Time for Sergeants' as well."

Is it possible that George is stagestruck?

"Sure, I am," he said. "But that's true of all of us who have done well in the business; we all love to work. Jack Benny is that way. So is Bob Hope. Milton Berle? Why, all you have to do is open a refrigerator door and the light causes him to go into 20 minutes of jokes.

"But it's true of the younger generation, too. Nothing could hold back an Ann-Margret or a Bobby Darin. They have that same thing that we have: the drive to please an audience. It happens that I discovered Ann-Margret, but I don't take any bows for it. If I hadn't discovered her, someone else would have. You can't hold back talent."

One-half of all traffic accidents occur within 25 miles of the driver's home.

HST, a Rumor-Squasher

"The flying rumours gather'd as they roll'd,
Scarce any tale was sooner heard than told;
And all who told it added something new,
And all who heard it made enlargements too."

Thus wrote the English poet, Pope, 250 years ago about a characteristic of the human race that antedated and postdated his own time.

This phenomenon of communcation is more pronounced on eves of political elections, one of which is now upon us as Tuesday primary day approaches. So we hear bandied about now the usual stories which do not have any known authority for their truth and, hence, are called rumors.

Once started rumors are swifter than the spacecraft Ranger 7 which landed on the moon Friday. Speed lends them strength.

Obviously the evil a rumor may do whether at election time or any other time should prompt a listener to be cautious of its acceptance and in its repetition.

Stimulated by the proper desire, little effort is required of anyone to search out the truth in areas where it should be revealed for the benefit of all concerned. If this desire does not exist, then rumors and half-truths, too, should be ignored if the principle of fairness is to prevail.

One of the best rumor-squashers of current days is Former President Harry S. Truman. At a news conference he was asked if he was part of the rumored "establishment," an ephemeral political catchword originated by a temportary coalition of Democratic and Republican opponents of Hilary Bush, candidate for governor of Missouri.

Mr. Truman quickly replied that he didn't quite know what (establishment) meant but "if it means an organization that can lick him (Bush's opponent) well, I'm a Democrat all the way through."

At the outset of the news conference called by Mr. Truman and with Lt. Gov. Bush at his side, the former president gave about as tersely cogent an endorsement of Mr. Bush as we have ever heard:

"You want to know whether I'm for this fellow or not. Well, I am."

You can put that down as truth, not rumor. These pithy words delighted hundreds of thousands of Missouri regular Democrats, and many on the fringe line, like this writer, who after 20 years finally found a subject of agreement with Mr. Truman—an endorsement of Hilary Bush for Governor of Missouri. Looking Backward

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO

The audit of Pettis county court house books and records, half completed, came to an abrupt conclusion with announcement that the entire staff of 30 field auditors assigned to check county records will be dismissed by the State Auditor Forrest Smith because of appropriation cuts in his department.

—1939—

Howard Roberts, owner of the Howard Roberts chain of grocery stores, has rented the store room at 118-120 East Third street and will open a new store there. The building is in charge of H. T. Williams, trustee who executed the lease with Mr. Roberts.

FORTY YEARS AGO

Application was filed in the circuit clerk's office for a passport to Europe by Miss Margaret McGinley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mike McGinley, 625 West Fifth street. Miss McGinley, accompanied by her sister, Miss Mary, will sail on the California and will visit Ireland, Scotland and England, France, Italy and Switzerland. They will be gone three months.

—1924—

City council passed an ordinance declaring it to be a violation of the law for vehicles to make a left hand turn on Ohio street from Main street south to the north line of Ninth street, except at Main street and Broadway.

MILWAUKEE JOURNAL: Transistor Jammer. — An acquaintance, an individualist with a low boiling point, has a particular aversion to transistor radios played at full throttle in buses. She now has a counter-irritant, an unobtrusive little gadget which fits in her purse. It was created for her by a friend versed in electronics. It can be made to jam an offending transistor radio so that it emits a violent screech. This, to the initiated, can be distinguished from rock and roll and usually results in the radio being snapped off.

The other day, two advertising men waxed lyrical about the future of radio. The day is coming, said one, "when a person will feel as undressed when not wearing or carrying a radio as he feels today when going about without a watch." Said the other: "We are entering the age of the lapel button radio."

Picture a Transit Co. bus at 7:30 a.m., carrying 40 passengers with 40 lapel radios all going full blast. The commercial possibilities of our friend's transistor jammer looks brighter every day.

Goldwater May Offer to Pack Court

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON—Barry Goldwater's strategy to win the south is to offer to pack the Supreme Court with pro-segregationist judges.

At least three of the liberal justices are beyond retirement age and Goldwater as president would be able to fill anywhere from three to five vacancies during his first term. Chief Justice Earl Warren, who wrote the famous 1954 school desegregation opinion, is now 73. Justice Hugo Black, a crusader for civil rights, is 78. Justice William O. Douglas, equally strong in fighting against segregation and for the re-apportionment of state legislatures, is 65 and has been talking about retiring.

Goldwater strategy was revealed to James D. Martin, Republican candidate for the Senate in Alabama, who in 1962 came within 6,000 votes of defeating veteran Senator Lister Hill of Alabama. Martin is now running for the House of Representatives.

"I have received assurances not only from Bill Miller but from others high in the Goldwater command that the senator if elected will fill vacancies on the Supreme Court with states-minded conservatives," Martin told me.

"He will also appoint an attorney general friendly to the south," Martin said.

"When Goldwater is elected, he is sure to be president for eight years," Martin enthused. "That means the whole structure of the Supreme Court will be changed during that time. This means the south will sit in the high councils of Washington and all the policies of the present Supreme Court can be reversed."

Martin said that he had flown to Washington to confer with Senator Goldwater and his aides before San Francisco and had also conferred with them in San Francisco. He had an especially promising talk with GOP vice presidential candidate Bill Miller.

They had given him a flat pledge that the new attorney general and the new justices of the Supreme Court would all be pro-segregationists in the Goldwater administration.

Mail-Bag

WILLIAM BUCKLEY JR., The National Review, New York — Re your defense of Goldwater's statement that "extremism in the defense of liberty is no vice. Moderation in the pursuit of justice is no virtue."

It's interesting to note that Euripides called moderation "the noblest gift of heaven"; Plutarch declared, "moderation is best and it avoids all extremes"; while St. Paul wrote, "every man that striveth for a mastery is temperate in all things." John Brown, an extremist who used violence during abolitionist days, was tried and hung. The southern seccessionists and the northern abolitionists were both extremists and eventually got this country into civil war. Abraham Lincoln persistently advocated moderation. He once said, "in grave emergencies moderation is always better than radicalism."

HONOLULU—Senator Dan Inouye of Hawaii, after being married for 15 years, became a father for the first time this month. But he forgot to treat Senate colleagues to cigars. Simultaneously, Senator Tom Dodd of Conn., became a grandfather, also forgot the cigars.

Jackie and Democrats

Jackie Kennedy has been helping backstage to plan for the Democratic national convention. She will not attend the convention, but she has some definite ideas on how the convention should honor her late husband.

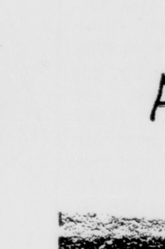

However, on one important point she and the brothers-in-law do not agree. They do not want any sadness or nostalgia at the convention, but rather motion pictures of the late president laughing and playing with his children, greeting members of Congress, relaxing at Hyannis Port, and getting a rousing welcome in Ireland, England, and Vienna.

Mrs. Kennedy thinks a little sorrow and ceremony would not be out of place. But she has been overruled by the majority of the family.

THE DOCTOR SAYS

If You 'Blow Your Stack' Cool Off, or Suffer

By Wayne G. Brandstadt, M.D.,
Newspaper Enterprise Association

Let's see what happens when you "blow your stack" when angry. It has been found that you take deeper breaths, your pulse quickens, your blood pressure rises and your digestion stops as the blood is drawn from your alimentary tract to your muscles.

In such blinding rage you may be especially prone to an accident if you are driving a car, operating a machine in a factory or handling hot soup in a kitchen.

Plainly such a state calls for cooling off. On the other hand, pent-up anger can cause chronically high blood pressure, peptic ulcer, colitis, angina pectoris and other so-called psychosomatic ailments.

Because anger causes a sudden squeezing of adrenalin into your blood it may be associated with a sudden pain in the region of your adrenal glands and a sudden surge of blood to your head may precipitate a headache.

Adrenalin poured into the blood served the primitive purpose of preparing a person for a sudden burst of energy—fight or flight. But in a civilized community neither of these actions is appropriate.

Since it is no longer socially acceptable to lose control of your temper, you are apt to wind up with physical symptoms. Illness is still socially permissible and may even get you a certain amount of sympathy.

The hidden rages within us often have their origin in infancy. As children we all have desires that cannot or should not be granted. This leads to frustration and anger. As adults, the problem becomes one of letting off steam.

There are various ways of doing this. You can whack away at a golf ball, beat the stuffing out of a punching bag, or hammer nails in the back fence. This will enable you to use up the physical energy your anger has summoned up and will act as a safety valve. If it is not convenient to do any of these things a brisk walk will serve the purpose very well.

Some persons get the same kind of relief vicariously by watching a boxing or wrestling match or some other contact sport. Still others take it out in writing a scurrilous letter of protest even though they know they won't mail it.

Or you may want to take it out on the keys of a piano as a means of releasing your emotions.

The moral of this story is: Don't hoard your resentments. That is the path that leads to neurosis and a whole Pandora's box of diseases.

The Bargain Counter

The women push and shove
And a controversy starts up
When each of two hold a glove,
They sometimes forget manners
And their tempers seem to flare
When neither will give up a glove
That one might have a pair;
There's a lot of conversation
As they look the bargains o'er
And a bolt of Satin ribbon
Goes a tumbling on the floor —
Somebody took the pin out
And as it goes round and round
It leaves a trail of ribbon
As it quickly is unwound —
"I mustn't stay here longer"
Pipes up one woman there,
"I've got an appointment
"At the shop to fix my hair —"
"I must go too," says another
"To get my dinner on —"
But a full half hour later
Neither one of them have gone.
And a gal who wears a 40
When all slips there she's gone through Says: "I never get a bargain —
"All those slips are 32 —"
One picked up a flask or perfume
Just to smell it — that was all —
But someone knocked against her
And from her hand it fell
Sprinkling everything with perfume,
A blue silk dress for tots —
A blouse of pink satin —
Were covered now with spots;
A woman with one earring
Was a searching for the other
A small boy was a tugging
Whinning: "I wanta go home, Mother,"
They talk about the remnants
To make this and that —
One buys some purple ribbon
To retrim a last year's hat,
"Do you like this bracelet, darling?"
A mother asks a teen,
And when her daughters brightens
Added: "For me, I mean,"
"This hair rinse is a bargain —"
Said one, "But I'm afraid —"
As she looked the bottle over —
"It isn't quite my shade —"
"My children will be home soon
"I've simply go to go,
"Me, too," says another
"Having guests tonight, you know—"
They have a big discussion
On their family affairs —
One shows her family pictures
And the others all show theirs,
And they all just keep on staying
Because everybody knows
They won't leave that bargain table
Till time for the store to close.

Automation Catches Up With 'Bandit'

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP)—Automation has caught up with that women gamblers' delight, the one-armed bandit.

Now there's a no-arm bandit.

It looks pretty much like a regular slot machine but after you drop in the coin the wheels with pictures of cherries and bells are spun electronically.

This has certain advantages for the gambler. The conventional jackpot machine is operated two-handed — drop in the coin with the left, pull the lever with the right.

The new model employs the right for coin dropping, leaving the left free for holding drinks, clutching purses, digging for more change, or even scratching one's back. It also makes it easier for smokers and those who prefer operating two or three machines at one time.

For the casino, the electronic models are a bit of a bonanza. They don't require "elbow room" to the side and space at the rear for emptying coin boxes. This permits twice as many new ones in the same floor area.

And at a 900-per-hour coin-gulping rate, they permit a theoretical 3,500 extra plays ever 24 hours, if operated steadily.

Because the house always wins, this is important. Machines are set to keep anywhere from 10 to 30 per cent of the coins fed into them.

Slots, 18,000 of them, are big business in this haven of legal gambling. They grossed $81 million in Nevada in 1962, out of $675 million fed in.

But, says inventor Jack La Vigna, simplicity was what he had in mind when he created the automatic—a 16-month job.

"I operated a slot machine route of my own, and I just got fed up with getting up at four in the morning to make repairs. I decided to make a simpler machine," he says.

He anticipates the only resistance to his new slow machine will come from "diehards who are going to demand handles."

"I'm very encouraged by the play my first model is getting. It appears to be very popular with women. And let's face it, they're the real slot machine players," La Vigna says.

FINDING THE WAY

The Small Bridge, First

BY RALPH W. LOEW, D.D.
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

For more than 16 years, thousands of visitors to the United States and Canada from almost every country of the world have been the recipients of warm and sincere hospitality. Under the auspices of various organizations, such as World Hospitality, these visitors not only saw buildings, wonders of nature and factories. They spent weekends with new friends, explored kitchens and back yards, helped broil a steak or shared a family conversation.

Valuable as is this hospitality, no one supposes that it can solve international tensions. Life isn't quite that simple. Yet over and over again it has provided the bridge of friendship.

Why can't we try the same thing more frequently in our own neighborhoods? The subtleties of so many tensions in our cities, towns and villages demand that we break down the rigid barriers instead of perpetuating the "foreignness" of so many of our citizens.

Imagine what would happen if attorneys, ministers, carpenters, auto workers or housekeepers would entertain their parallel in some other racial or ethnic group. That wouldn't solve all of the problems but it would provide an area of understanding.

Hayikawa, the internationally famous semantics expert, has told of the value of "small talk." Two people can chat for a few minutes concerning the weather or sports or any other subject, simply learning to know one another. It is like the small bridges which the Japanese build across a ditch. They could step across, but the colorful little bridges provides the situation where two persons can meet and talk.

These small bridges of communication are needed in our communities.

It is somewhat shocking to know how many of us have never had a speaking acquaintance or personal friendship with someone in a different ethnic, cultural, racial or educational pattern. We are so busy entertaining our friends that we become strangers to those who are outside our little circles.

The problems of the world are far too complex for any of us to solve by ourselves. Chatting in your own back yard with a man of a different accent or skin tone or cultural background won't solve them all, either. But it will build that small bridge.

It's something that any one of us can do now. It might be exciting to see what would happen if that movement spread across the hemisphere!

We the Women

Hurrah for the Topless!

By Ruth Millett
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

Women owe the designer of the topless bathing suit a standing vote of thanks. Thanks for stepping so far beyond the bounds of good taste and decency that women are forced to take a good, hard look at all th ugly, unfeminine, tasteless styles the men who design clothes for women have been dreaming up to make women look absurd.

First there was the sack, modest but so unbecoming to the feminine figure that men hooted at it. Undaunted by the sack's reception, the designers have kept bringing it back under first one name and then another.

Ther there was the bikini — a style better suited for a strip-tease joint than a public beach. In the bikini, most women look repulsive. Those few who don't would look far more beautiful in something designed to subtly flatter the feminine form, instead of in a garment which blatantly cheapens it.

And those low-on-the-hips pants that girls swaggered around in for a couple of seasons when they were "in" were pretty cheap-looking, weren't they? They made any girl who wore them appear to be looking for a pick-up.

And now they're trying to get grown women into the topless swimsuit held up by a pair of straps—like a baby's sunsuit. If anything could make the feminine figure look more grotesque and do any more to rob a woman of the femininity that is her natural right, it's still in the mind of some dress designer with designs against feminine charm and beauty and dignity.

So thanks, boys, for the topless swimsuit and the bare-front cocktail dress. With them, you've tipped your hand. Now we women ought to be smart enough to turn thumbsdown on any future style you dream up to make us look silly.

From now on, maybe we'll stick together and demand that you design clothes that flatter us or get out of the business.

How many of you women agree that the designer of the topless swimsuit has done women a real favor?

FBI Plans Meeting For Law Officers

Special Agent H. A. Fitzgibbon of the Kansas City office of the FBI today announced that a specialized law enforcement conference would be sponsored by the FBI at Jefferson City Aug. 11. he purpose of the conference is to discuss the provisions of the newly enacted Civil Rights Act of 1964 (Public Law 88-352), in addition to a review of the provisions of the Fugitive Felon Act.

Sheriff Emmett Fairfax and Deputy Jack Couts, and Prosecuting Attorney J. R. Fritz plan to attend from Pettis County, and Police Chief Bill Miller and Assistant Chief Charles Knapp plan to attend from the Sedalia Police Department.

According to Fitzgibbon, the conference will be attended by representatives of the FBI and law enforcement agencies in this area. The meeting is being held in connection with a series of conferences throughout the nation between now and Aug. 28.

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover stated that officials attending the conferences will be provided with full information pertaining to the FBI's responsibilities under the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Hoover stated that the nationwide conferences are being held in view of the numerous requests which have been received from police executives concerning the new civil rights legislation and its relationship to law enforcement on all levels.

The series will also contain a complete discussion of the provisions of the Fugitive Felon Act in an effort to inform local agencies of the services which can be rendered by the FBI where a fugitive has fled the state to avoid prosecution, custody or confinement after conviction of a crime which is a felony under the laws of the state where the crime occurred.

Drum Anti-US Propaganda Into Algerian Population

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — In a downtown Algiers bookstore, a window exhibit shows a grinning, top-hatted American capitalist, a smoking gun in each hand, squatting comfortably on the body of an African worker.

Nearby, a translated Chinese poem proclaims its irony:

"With 1,000 Chinese corpses we will cover our costs,

"With 100,000 Chinese dead we'll be saved,

"With ten million Asians we'll end the crisis."

Down the street, an official exhibit shows pictures of Communist North Korea's "victorious struggle for freedom" in the Korean War. The government daily Le People carries two photographs side by side to illustrate life in Korea: smiling girls, folk-dancing in the North, police breaking up a students' demonstration in the South.

A cartoon in the organ of the Algerian Labor Federation depicts a grim-faced Uncle Sam holding a six-shooter pointed straight at the reader.

These are all part of a propaganda campaign drummed day and night into the Algerian population through the government-controlled press, radio and other means.

It irritates American and other Western diplomats, without, however, making them fear an outright Communist takeover or a great spread of Red influence in Algeria's public opinion.

President Ahmed Ben Bella says his anticapitalist "Socialist revolution" is a purely Algerian product and will never succumb to Soviet domination. Nevertheless, Ben Beila's National Liberation Front — FLN — is the only ruling party in an Arab state to have established organic "brotherly ties" with the Soviet Communist party.

The Algerian Communist party has been dissolved and its members were admitted individually into the FLN.

Communist sympathizers control all the news available to the Algerian public through press or radio. The views of Ben Bella's fugitive opponents are suppressed. The Western viewpoint on world issues is ignored or misrepresented. French and other foreign newspapers are confiscated whenever they contain material regarded by the regime as critical or merely unenthusiastic.

Nevertheless, Western diplomats believe the propaganda machine has failed to build up any widespread anti-Western feeling among the Algerian population.

Saline Taxes Cut 10 Cents On the $100

The Saline County court has announced the tax levy for the general revenue fund of the county has been reduced for 1964 from 50 cents to 40 cents on the $100 assessed valuation.

Presiding Judge H. C. Young and Associate Judges Frank Boatright and Russell Lee, in announcing the tax reduction, reported the county in sound financial condition and the reduction in taxes will not cause a curtailment of services, offered by the county. The judges also advised the 10-cent reduction on the $100 valuation will amount to a total in savings for the taxpayers of about $56,000 annually.

The court pointed out that because this reduction has been authorized for the 1964 levy does not mean that in another year or so all or part of the reduction may not have to be levied again, depending on the needs projected for the respective year.

"We intend to do our part to keep the county moving ahead," the judges declared.

One major factor contributing to the current tax reduction is the present operation of the Saline County Rest Home, now leased to a non-profit corporation whose board of directors is made up of volunteer Saline county citizens.

Under existing state law as long as the court operated the county home residents there could not draw old-age assistance, therefore the county had to pay all the expenses of the home from the county general revenue fund. The court reports that under the new arrangement the patients not only get better care but the home is now caring for more patients than before.

The 5 cents levied in 1963 for the Johnson grass program, which is being dropped for 1964, accounts for one-half of the 10-cent tax reduction authorized by the court.

Other changes in administration, such as closer scrutiny of purchasing in several areas, has helped to make the tax reduction possible, the court reports.

Rule Is at Stake

Singapore Premier Faces Biggest Fight of Career

By TONY ESCODA

SINGAPORE (AP) — Singapore's Premier Lee Kuan Yew, a tough political battler, is facing what could be the biggest fight of his career.

At stake is his rule over this island city, the commercial center of young Malaysia. It has long been a hotbed of leftist agitation and a prime target for Southeast Asia's Reds.

Elected by a landslide in 1959, Lee has beaten back opposition from the extreme left—occasionally jailing top pro-Communist politicians—while pushing a moderately Socialist program aimed at stabilizing Singapore.

This time, Lee says, the threat comes from the far right.

He blames Malay "extremists" for last week's savage racial clashes between Malays and Chinese, and warns this may be just the beginning.

Unless "we read the danger signals and put our house in order," the premier states, "Malaysia may never be the same again."

Those close to the premier's thinking paint an even more gloomy picture: an "ungovernable" Singapore—and the breakup of Malaysia.

Lee has accused ultranationalist Malays in Kuala Lumpur, the federal capital, of outdoing hostile Indonesia in efforts to "set Malaysian against Malaysian on the basis of race."

Without naming names, Lee has made it plain he means some of the leading figures in the United Malay National Organization—UMNO. This is the key faction in malaysian Prime Minister Tunku Abdul Rahman's ruling Alliance party.

A showdown on the race issue between Lee and Rahman seems likely.

The premier has served notice he would like to see Rahman muzzle ultranationalists in UMNO, as a starter.

The next step, Lee says, should be to "start integrating positively and consciously."

Lee's statements, coming on top of the racial riots, point up the divisive factors at work in 10-month-old Malaysia, with its population of 4.2 million Chinese, 4 million Malays and a mixture of Indians, Pakistanis and Eurasians.

NEW HOPE FOR HEADACHE SUFFERERS

Headaches bring more misery than any other ill, and no headache pain is worse than migraines; now, however, a new drug relieves suffering while doctors work on the underlying causes

By WILLIAM COLE

"FOR 15 YEARS, ever since I started getting migraine headaches, I lived in agony," the 35-year-old housewife said.

"Not only that blasting pain—as though the side of my head were erupting—but the anticipation of the pain, the fear that it would come in public and that I would be physically sick. It was so bad at times that I contemplated suicide, and then I went to a headache clinic, where I was given a new drug called methysergide. I haven't had a really bad headache since."

Methysergide, a pharmaceutical chemical recently made available after years of testing, has proved successful as a preventive agent for many other migraine sufferers, too. In a three-year study of hundreds of patients with migraine and other vascular headaches (those associated with the blood-vessel system), it helped approximately 70 percent, according to Dr. John H. Graham of the Harvard medical faculty and director of the Headache Research Foundation, Faulkner Hospital, Boston, who conducted the study.

Other headache studies throughout the country have reported similar success with methysergide. The advent of the drug has been called "the most exciting development in headache research in recent years" by the National Institute of Neurological Diseases and Blindness, a government agency supporting many headache research projects. In its efforts to understand the precise nature of a universal malady which creates more misery than any other human ill, NINDB and other investigators are studying body fluids of migraine patients for biochemical changes, using electronic devices to compute the pulsations of blood vessels and the contractions of muscles, and analyzing genetic and personality factors.

Just exactly how methysergide works is not clear. Authorities believe that it affects those centers of the brain that control the dilation and constriction of blood vessels. In migraine attacks, pain is caused by the dilation of sensitive cranial blood vessels, which makes them taut and rigid.

No drug, by itself, will cure a chronic headache. Dr. Graham and other specialists point out that headache is not a disease but a symptom of a physical or emotional disturbance, and it cannot be successfully treated without treating the underlying cause. Like ulcers, it is associated with tension and certain personality traits.

Only a small percentage of recurring headaches are due to brain tumors, head injuries, infections, and other wholly physical factors. The majority of recurring headaches, including migraines, stem basically from anxiety, frustration, depression, and other emotional conflicts.

MANY CHRONIC headache sufferers are well-adjusted and content, but often they drive themselves too hard: the woman whose ambition for her husband exceeds his own, the man who is a perfectionist in his work and can't relax.

"Treatment of headache is one of the most difficult phases of modern practice," says Dr. Arnold P. Friedman, chief of the headache unit of Montefiore Hospital, New York. "It is essential that the physician make an appraisal of the total functioning of the individual. This requires a thoroughly detailed history and physical examination and a correct interpretation of the personality and psychic factors involved. The physician must devote a good deal of time and effort to the patient's problems (that are causing the tension) if he expects any results with whatever drugs he may use."

When maladjustment is pronounced, psychotherapy may be required.

Migraine headaches are by far the severest kind. Other recurring headaches are usually of comparatively low intensity and yield, as do ordinary occasional headaches, to such household remedies as aspirin and other nonprescription pain relievers. In migraine headaches, these offer little relief, for they reduce the capacity to feel pain by only about 30 percent. Sedatives and tranquilizers are helpful in that they relax tension. So do rest, cold compresses, warm baths, gentle massage, coffee, and other conventional antiheadache measures. But, to date, the only effective treatment for high-intensity vascular headaches is the ergot derivative drugs, which constrict swollen blood vessels.

Anyone who has ever experienced an acute migraine attack will want, above all, to avert a recurrence. That is why millions of chronic migraine sufferers are greeting methysergide with sighs of relief. It isn't the final answer. No pill or powder, alone, will ever provide that. The most effective therapy is to reduce tensions.

In this, your doctor can greatly help. And it is good to know that while you are working on this sometimes difficult project, you can be completely or substantially free of pain.

This correctional, learn-by-example "Case Book" shows you how other parents have met problems that are typical of your child's ethical and general development...

Teaching Your Child RIGHT from WRONG

LEARN FROM THESE ACTUAL CASES AND HUNDREDS MORE WHAT OTHER PARENTS DID TO HELP THEIR CHILDREN LEARN BY EXPERIENCE.

All of us, new and not-so-new parents alike, are living in times entirely different from those of our grandparents, or even of our own mothers and fathers. The problem of how to develop a sense of social responsibility in children was complex and seldom solved in their day. Many of today's parents are uncertain about their own roles in relation to the behavior of their children.

Your child's appreciation of what is right can be his key to a happy life. It's natural and important that you should want to learn more, know more, understand more about what you can do to help.

From her years of experience in parent education, Dorothy K. Whyte has selected for Teaching Your Child Right From Wrong actual "cases" that are typical of the problems in which she has been professionally involved. With each "case" example you'll find a warm, sympathetic, easy-to-understand discussion of general principles, correlated to children from the very youngest age to mid-teens.

Troubled BERTHA JACKSON finally came out with it: "George, I'm a little concerned with all this happiness talk. Of course we want CAROL to be happy, but I also want her to learn right from wrong." (Page 16)

HILARY STERN, thirteen, returned a gold watch she found on the bus, even though no one had noticed her pick it up . . . (Page 18)

After he entered the fourth grade, JOHNNY MORAN began to contradict almost everything, saying, "You're wrong, you don't know." He was obviously more intent on making a good impression on his pals than on his parents . . . (Page 22)

THE GRAYSONS had hopped on the "togetherness" bandwagon early. The family spent practically all of its free time self-consciously doing things together. JANIE, three, told her aunt: "I love to go somewhere alone. It makes me feel like my own real self." (Page 25-26)

With the curiosity of a three-year-old, TEDDY was found by his mother in a neighbor's yard undressing little Joan to find out how she was made . . . (Page 30)

To MR. AND MRS. LEVIN the idea of sixteen-year-old MARGIE "going steady" has a frightening ring of permanency about it . . . (Page 38-39)

"How can I teach ANDY to mind without being too tough on him?" (Page 44)

MRS. EVANS thought she could teach sixteen-month old ROBIN not to touch forbidden objects by repeatedly slapping her hands and saying "No-no." (Page 49)

Six-year old MARTHA ROTH wants to stay up until nine or ten o'clock at night watching television or reading or having fun with the rest of the family . . . (Page 54)

BRIAN COOPER had been told many times to put his bicycle in the garage at night instead of leaving it on the front lawn. He invariably "forgot." (Page 58)

ANN thinks her parents are unreasonable for not letting her stay out until midnight or go to a party on an occasional Friday. Her 15-year-old point of view deserves consideration . . . (Page 61)

Six-year old PRUDY KORT, after a week at school, simply refused to return . . . (Page 67)

Ask yourself, "Is what seemed right for me necessarily going to be best for him?"

ERNEST MARX, at eight, had just moved with his family to a new town and a new, strange school . . . (Page 76)

Seven-year-old PETER FRAMER and his friends were, if anything, more violent and aggressive in their play—not less so—after watching their favorite violent TV shows . . . (Page 84-85)

The new baby was a new member of the family who demanded much of his mother's time. Five-year-old CHRIS BRADY, like all children, wanted not only to be loved; he wanted to be loved best . . . (Page 95-96)

"Show me the kids who never fight!" says MR. HARWOOD of his two boys, aged eight and ten. "It's natural for brothers to quarrel . . ." (Page 100)

Twelve-year-old ALICE GILLESPIE was painfully aware that her older sister EILEEN was an honor student. "Why can't you get grades like your sister's?" was an all-too-familiar refrain at home . . . (Page 103)

Try not to be discouraged if you do not always understand all the reasons behind your teenager's varied behavior. He does not understand them all himself . . . (Page 134)

WENDY's "need to belong" developed into a "need to look down upon" as she acquired feelings of prejudice from her parents, relatives and friends . . . (Page 111)

His mother was shocked to discover that seven-year-old DAN THORNTON had been going on "swiping" sprees at the supermarket with his boy friend . . . (Page 140)

SALLY BROWN, at twelve, enjoys spending her allowance as soon as she gets it . . . (Page 144)

When MAUD and ALLAN HELLER decided to tell their two sons that they were getting a divorce, they told the children exactly what the future plans were . . . (Page 154)

When six-year-old EVIE COLE's grandmother died, her mother could not bring herself to talk about it . . . (Page 156)

Mrs. Ellburg insists that eight-year-old TONY take his five-year-old brother along wherever he goes . . . (Page 106)

JOEL CARTON never felt like a "real father" until his seven-months-old baby son started looking toward the door evenings when told it was time for Daddy to come home. (Page 124)

"Mommy, I've just got to have that new walking, talking doll we saw on TV!" announces eight-year-old KATHY . . . (Page 136)

When MR. ELLIS lost his job, he and his wife decided not to tell the children . . . (Page 159)

How Those Foundations Give Away Billions

Their tax-free dollars go for everything from prairie chickens to studies of the moon—but how much good do they accomplish for mankind?

By JAMES C. G. CONNIFF

RECENTLY, the Ford Foundation gave $7 million to encourage ballet. About the same time, a prominent medical scientist was disappointedly reading his 50th turndown for a grant from another foundation.

Under a program alive with challenge, he has tried in vain for four years to scrape up $100,000 to launch badly needed studies of human brain function. When he heard about the huge grant to assist ballet, he wept.

Earlier, another foundation plowed $500,000 into finding out more about scalp problems, including psoriasis. There's homeless-cat-and-dog money all over the place, and in New England a trust fund continues to pile up interest so that needy horses may be assured a Christmas dinner (a bushel of oats or a half-bushel of corn each).

Admittedly, these are offbeat examples. But, in general, is there rhyme or reason to the way philanthropic foundations operate? How much money do they command? How do they make up their minds about who gets what? How do they benefit you? Are they a boon to society or just an elaborate tax dodge for the wealthy?

To find out, FAMILY WEEKLY spent almost a year in the strongholds of moneyed privacy, asking penetrating questions. Here it brings to its readers the interesting and—on the whole—reassuring answers.

How many tax-free foundations are there?

Congressman Wright Patman of Texas, who has been looking into the impact on our economy of tax-exempt foundations and charitable trusts, believes there may be more than 45,000. Others estimate as many as 60,000. But the annual Foundation Directory, published by the Russell Sage Foundation, states that there are 15,000 but lists only 5,000. That is because a foundation must have $100,000 in assets (up from $50,000 in 1963) or have made grants of $10,000 during the year to be listed in the directory.

Are there many really big foundations?

Only a baker's dozen have assets over $100 million. Ford, far and away the biggest—some $3 billion—has five times the reserves of its nearest neighbor. Then come the Rockefeller Foundation's $632 million, Duke Endowment's $478 million, John A. Hartford's $360 million, W. K. Kellogg's $310 million, Alfred P. Sloan's $271 million, Carnegie's $268 million—and six others under $200 million each.

Surprisingly, three-fourths of the capital of all foundations is held, not by 13 giants, but by some 150 "smaller" foundations, each with assets of $10 million or more.

On the other hand, 50,000 really small foundations—each with, say, $14,000 in assets and yearly grants of $2,600 apiece—would not equal even one-fourth of the Ford Foundation's wealth.

All told, the foundations listed in the 1964 Foundation Directory control better than $12 billion in tax-free philanthropic capital.

Are all foundations pretty much alike?

By no means. They fall into five main types:

1. General research foundations (about 190), which control 64 percent of that $12 billion, give mainly to education, health, and welfare.
2. Special-purpose foundations (about 479), which have 9 percent of the assets, with goals from here to (literally) the moon.
3. Community foundations (some 102), which administer funds left in trust for local projects and memorials.
4. Company-sponsored foundations (currently 1,716), which represent 28 percent of all foundations and concentrate on industrial programs.
5. Family foundations (all the rest), which focus on keeping alive the varied charitable interests of the founder and his (or her) heirs.

Are special-purpose foundation goals always eccentric?

No, but they can be frustratingly rigid. The Prairie Chicken Foundation in Illinois, for example, may use its funds for no purpose beyond the goodhearted but narrow one of preserving what's left of prairie-chicken flocks.

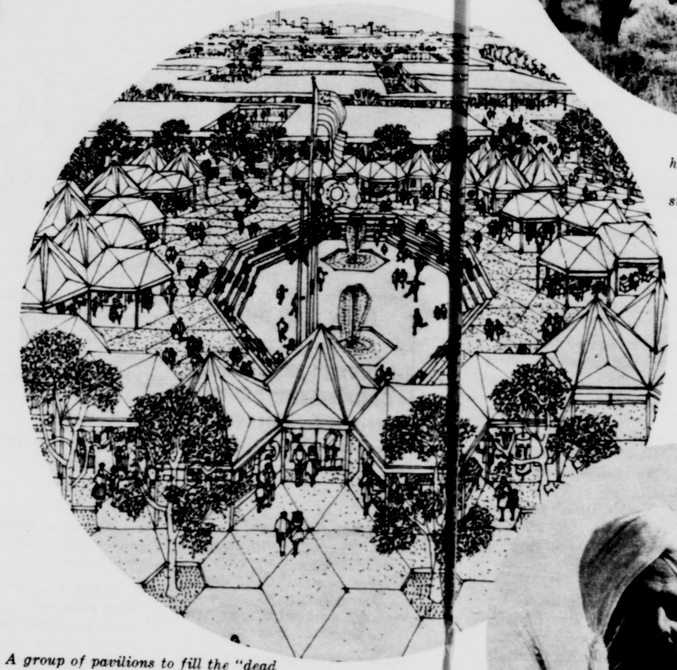

On the other hand, the Fred L. Lavanburg Foundation has a program that will lift the hearts of millions. The Lavanburgs commissioned architect Charles M. Goodman to develop colorful and easily erected pavilions of low cost for the "dead space" areas that often surround high-rise housing projects. Soon these paper-strewn wastelands across the U.S. will give way to gay neighborhood "pavilion centers" where, in separate units, tots can play, young people hold dances, and their elders cultivate hobbies—all without getting in one another's hair.

Where are most of the foundations?

More than a third, with more than two-thirds of the cash, are in the Middle Atlantic region—New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania. New York has the most (1,316), with 56 percent of the money—around $7 billion. Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin come next.

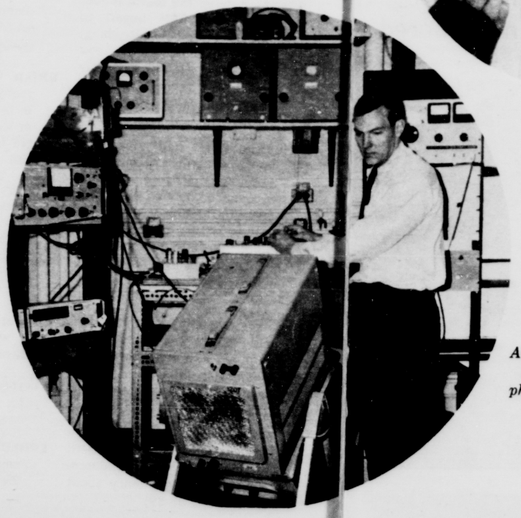

The Rockefeller Foundation helps foster agricultural research at La Campaña experiment station in Chihuahua, Mexico.

A group of pavilions to fill the "dead spaces" often surrounding housing projects is the dream of architect Charles Goodman, commissioned by the Lavanburg Foundation.

An Indian student at a Ford Foundation center learns that fertilized wheat grows faster.

An Alfred P. Sloan research fellow pursues his interest in physics, free to chart the course his research will take.

Except for community foundations and most company ones, place has no meaning. All give to worthwhile projects nationally and even globally.

Who invented foundations?

It is an American idea, either unknown or misunderstood elsewhere. Frederick T. Gates, Baptist preacher and friend-advisor of John D. Rockefeller, played a major role in advancing foundations to the big-league level by convincing the oil tycoon that Andrew Carnegie was right when he said, "The man who dies rich dies disgraced." In its 50 years, the Rockefeller Foundation alone has bestowed almost $1 billion.

Those who think the whole idea is a thinly disguised tax dodge overlook the fact that charitable foundations originated before the income tax. More than a century ago, French writer Alexis de Tocqueville noted that the organized giving away of money is "an American habit."

Where does most of the money go today?

Foundation grants these days go mainly to education—more than $300 million a year. International activities get $100 million-plus. Welfare receives a cut below that, and health a notch lower still. Science, interestingly, trails health. Aid to religion is a small but useful $50 million. The humanities and cultural pursuits follow.

How do you qualify for a foundation grant?

F. Emerson Andrews, director of New York's Foundation Library—clearinghouse for information on U.S. foundations—recommends presenting to the foundation of your choice "hopeful and imaginative projects which will aid its efforts to translate mere money into a solid advance in knowledge or human happiness."

He says the fund searcher owes it to himself to use the Library in finding out which foundations make grants in his field. That way there is less waste of time and money, less risk of having his proposal wind up in the wastebasket.

On this score, a long-time trustee of one of the top 13 foundations told this reporter, "As long as you have a really sound proposal, keep writing. The way we figure, if a guy gives up after the first turndown, he couldn't have had much confidence in the idea himself."

But don't foundations just duplicate what government does anyway?

Foundations point the way. Alone and in concert with government, their small but highly trained staffs use relatively modest resources to blaze trails against disease and ignorance. One result has been control of epidemic disease, and our whole public-health program is a huge national debt to foundation enterprise.

Once foundations have laid the groundwork, their managers agree they should move on to new problems. There lies their richest potential for continuing public service.

And the foundations are doing just that: in intensive research on the mind and its significant role in behavior; in basic language studies; in better ways to speed world news flow; and in expanding educational tv.

Can anybody set up a foundation?

Yes, if he has the funds, however modest, and obtains approval from the Internal Revenue Service. Once established, a foundation must make an annual report of its activities to the tax authorities as proof that it is living up to its privileged status as a tax-free public trust.

Even so, Congress is in the midst of a full-scale study to see whether tighter control of foundations may not be in order. Congressman Wright Patman's Subcommittee No. 1 of the Select Committee on Small Business has found that just 534 big foundations, with assets of more than $10 billion, paid no taxes on $7 billion in income during the decade ending 1960.

With the Federal government's pressing need for revenue, Congressman Patman says, "I find it difficult to reconcile the withdrawal of $1 billion annually from the reach of the Treasury." He is urgently recommending legislation to reform "the trend to shift the wealth of America's richest families into tax-exempt foundations and trusts"—a trend which he believes "represents a gigantic loophole in our tax laws."

Foundation people privately agree that they themselves could do much to offset such criticism if they could persuade the big brass to let them tell the inspiring story of the foundations more freely. That way, they feel, there would be less resentment of their blanket tax exemption.

But isn't it natural not to brag about your charity?

It is indeed. Look at the biggest, richest, most generous foundation on earth: the ordinary American citizen. By and large, he isn't aware that of every private dollar given to education, welfare, health, science, religion, and the arts, our 15,000-odd foundations provide less than a dime of this amount.

But even if he were aware of it, he wouldn't be likely to crow about where the other 90 cent-plus comes from: his own—your own—boundless pocketbook and heart.

Sean Connery—The Private Life of the Amazing "James Bond"

Filmdom's Agent 007 is a rugged product of poverty; his wife is from an old and honored family—it's an odd combination for marriage but a successful one

By ROBERT PEEL

IN THE SPRING of 1962, a tall, brown-eyed man with a ruggedly handsome face and powerful build stood a lonely vigil below the Rock of Gibraltar. He was waiting for his fiancée to arrive from Algeciras, on the opposite side of the straits, for their wedding.

As the ferry pulled up, passengers fanned out onto the mainland. But his fiancée was not among them, and the handsome Scotsman began to think that perhaps his luck in his personal life was no better than in his career.

The man's name was Sean Connery, now better known as the James Bond of Ian Fleming's "Dr. No," "From Russia with Love," and "Goldfinger." And the girl for whom he waited was Diane Cilento, even then a leading actress in England though not well-known in the U.S. till she won an Academy Award nomination for her role as Molly in "Tom Jones."

For three agonizing hours Sean paced up and down the Gibraltar wharf until another ferry docked. This time Diane was on it, but their problems had only begun.

Diane, an Australian citizen, had to enter Gibraltar from Algeciras "because there was some kind of mix-up with my papers," she recalled when I talked to her on the eve of her departure to costar with Charlton Heston and Rex Harrison in "The Agony and the Ecstasy."

"When I tried to get on the first ferry, so many people crowded ahead of me that I never made it. I was luckier with the next boat, but when I finally met Sean and we got to the office of the judge who was to perform the ceremony, he was in the middle of a case. The two English soldiers Sean had secured as witnesses couldn't wait as they had to report back to duty.

"Sean went out and found a couple of natives who couldn't understand us any better than we understood them. Sean pantomimed our intentions by putting a ring on my finger, and they finally understood and agreed to be witnesses. But the papers had to be signed by someone who spoke English, so we went to a nearby milk-bottling works and waited around until we located two people."

On the surface, few husbands and wives seem less suited to each other than Sean Connery and Diane Cilento, who met when they did "Anna Christie" together for BBC.

CONNERY WAS BORN 33 years ago in Edinburgh, where his father worked as a truck driver. But he resents any reference to his "underprivileged" childhood.

"We were a lot better off than most people," he insists. "Some people think I'm either too dull or too serious because I don't like to talk much about myself, but I don't like phoniness, and overemphasizing my early life would be just that." The fact remains that the Connerys lived in a tenement district of Edinburgh, four of them in two rooms with one cold-water tap. One of the rooms was a kitchen which doubled as a bedroom for Sean and his brother.

Connery got his first job at nine, and after his school years went to work in a succession of jobs that required plenty of stamina—cement mixer, steel bender, lifeguard, and even coffin polisher.

His first serious interest was commercial art. He became a model to pay for his lessons and showed some promise. A fortuitous event, however, shifted him into show business. He was on a holiday in London when he ran into a friend who was in the chorus of the musical, "South Pacific." The friend suggested Sean try out for the show since one of the boys in the cast had just left. Pretending to be an experienced performer, Connery talked himself into the vacancy, then spent the next 48 hours taking intensive private dancing lessons.

After 18 months in "South Pacific," Connery decided to make show business his profession "because it's probably the only type of work where there is very little authority. If you louse it up, you're out—that's true. But at least you're independent."

Connery wanted more than chorus work, so he took a cut in salary to join a small suburban London repertory company. There he earned barely enough for subsistence but had the chance to do new dramatic roles every week. He finally appeared in half a dozen films, but none made much of an impact until he was chosen by the readers of the London Express as the ideal actor to portray James Bond, Agent 007.

On the other hand, Sean's wife Diane Cilento comes not only from the opposite side of the world but a completely different social level.

Diane has green eyes, corn-gold hair, and describes herself as "35-23-35—I think." She was born in New Guinea in 1934, and her family is dedicated to the medical profession. Her father, Sir Rafael Cilento, who is of Italian descent, was knighted for his services in the field of tropical medicine. Her mother had a busy practice as a gynecologist. All her brothers and sisters, except one, are doctors. Her famous ancestors on her father's side include an Italian relative who was hanged by Lord Nelson for starting an uprising when Nelson was governor of Naples, and a grandfather on her mother's side, Charles McGlew, who discovered the first tin and copper deposits in Australia.

Diane's family moved to Queensland, Australia, when she was six. And when she was 14, her father was sent to the United Nations in New York. She studied at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts and won a scholarship to the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts in London. Since then, she has appeared in more than 100 plays and innumerable movies and tv shows.

EVEN THOUGH Diane could have relied on her father for financial support, she was aggressively independent. "I insisted on subsidizing my fees with spare-time work," she told me. "But to be honest, I never starved. The greatest struggle I ever had was when I was a student at the Royal Academy. I made about $12 a week working in a wine shop and later $13 a week selling jigsaw puzzles at a circus. Once in a while I skipped a meal, but that's no great sacrifice when you're as young as I was then."

Sean has a tendency to take things seriously, maybe too seriously. His sense of humor is crisp, sometimes acid. His distrust of people often borders on contempt.

His resentment against authority was evident even in his teens. He joined the Royal Navy when only 15 "because I had some romantic notion about what it would be like to sail around the world. Actually I never got any farther than the Mediterranean, and then didn't go ashore," Sean told me.

He still has two reminders of his service: a tattoo on each forearm, one saying "Mum and Dad" and the other, "Scotland Forever." He had signed up for seven years but was through after three. "I was temperamentally unsuited for the service," Sean admitted. "I disliked the authority to the extent that I got ulcers and a medical discharge. I considered my three years in the Navy a waste of time and energy!"

Connery readily admits that his enormous temper used to get him into trouble. Looking at his powerfully built, 6-foot-2-inch frame and tremendous hands, I could imagine what would happen to the recipient of his anger. "But I don't lose my temper very often any more, although I still get upset at little things."

Because of their contrasting backgrounds and upbringing, the Connerys' approach to life is quite different. Sean is sober, sensitive, reserved. Diane is outspoken, vivacious, the practical joker, who once was expelled from the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts for bringing a couple of bottles of wine into the school.

Connery's idea of fun and relaxation is typified by his preference for motorcycles, Levi's, and black-leather jackets.

"When I lived in Scotland, we used to go on weekend outings and sleep on the beach," he said. For quite a while, he continued to ride back and forth to work on his motorcycle.

Sean's favorite pastime is golf. When he came to Hollywood for Alfred Hitchcock's "Marnie," he found it too bothersome to pack his golf clubs. Instead, he plunked down $2,000 on a clubhouse counter one morning and told the pro to get him all the necessary equipment.

While Connery enjoys spending money—which is not surprising, considering he has had it only a short time—he refused to comply with such customary Hollywood status symbols as a chauffeured limousine offered him by the studio. "I used to be a truck driver," he commented. "What would I be doing with a chauffeur?"

About a year ago, Sean and Diane bought an old, four-story Spanish convent called the Adortrice in a suburb of London. "I did a lot of work on it myself," Sean told me. "I broke through several walls to make a huge living room out of what used to be the chapel and reception room. It has about three-quarters of an acre of ground, which gives ample play room for our children to romp." The Connerys have a girl, Giovanna, 7, by Diane's first marriage to an Italian writer, and a son Jason, who is 18 months old.

A COUPLE OF YEARS AGO, Sean was so discouraged with his career that he considered giving it up. Actor Stephen Boyd, a close friend of the Connerys, told me, "Only Diane's faith in him prevented Sean from capitulating and going into another profession."

Today Sean's agents demand—and get—$400,000 for his services.

Sean's own independence was evident when he refused to accept the lead in "Marnie" until he had read the script. "Even Cary Grant doesn't ask to read a Hitchcock script," he was told.

"Well, I'm not Cary Grant," Connery snapped back. "If you want me in the movie, send me a script." They did.

"There's only one thing I still want," Sean insists today. "To costar in a film with my wife."

Connery, who stars as hard-hitting James Bond (photos right), gets together with Bond's creator, Ian Fleming, and actress Shirley Eaton.

When the oatmeal foams to a gooey sludge,
And the cocoa spills in a pale-brown smudge,
And the coffee perks like Mount Vesuvius
Leaving a trail both charred and dubious,
It was in the stars to be this way—
I cleaned the stove just yesterday!

The teacher was having a hard time getting across arithmetic to one boy in her class, so she tried an example. "Now if a boy picked two bushels of apples in an orchard each hour, and a girl picked one bushel each hour, how many bushels would both pick in three hours?"

The youngster went into deep thought. "Now let's see if I got this right," he said. "There's a boy in the orchard and a girl in the orchard?" The teacher nodded. "And they're alone there for three hours?" The teacher nodded.

"Well," the pupil replied, "I'd guess that they don't pick no apples!" —Geoffrey Bottomley

In the homeowner's back yard was pile after pile of used rubber tires, "It was a hobby of mine," he explained to an irate neighbor. "It was a lot of fun, but I gave it up when I got 3,999 old tires."

The neighbor shook his head in disbelief. "Why stop there? Why not make it an even 4,000?"

The hobbyist shrugged. "Now what," he asked, "would I do with 4,000 worn-out tires?" —Ken Kraft

The young pupil was the teacher's greatest headache. All he did each day was to daydream, tease the girls, and doodle childish games. In an effort to gain his interest, the teacher ordered him to write a composition on "What I Would Do with a Million Dollars." But the boy just kept on alternately dozing and playing.

"Listen, Johnny," the exasperated teacher said. "I would like to know what you'd do with a million dollars!"

"But teacher," the pupil replied, "this is what I'd do if I had a million dollars!" —Gene Blackwell

When You

PHOTOGRAPHS BY KATHRYN ABBE

Here are tips from a famous photographer on how to make your kids look as wonderful on film as they are in real life

By KATHRYN ABBE
with Adele Whitely Fletcher

Photograph Your Child

Editors' Note: Possibly no one captures the enchantment of childhood on film the way Kathryn Abbe does. She became interested in photography while an art student and, upon graduating, went to work for the noted Toni Frissell. But it was after she married James Abbe, a prestige photographer, and moved to the country that she became famous as a children's photographer. Art directors and editors, catching tempting glimpses of the pictures she took of her own and neighboring children, began to buy them for covers, advertisements, and illustrations—and she was on her way to the unusual reputation she enjoys today!

TO GET REALLY good pictures of children, it is necessary to remember, above all, what not to do. For instance, never say, "Smile!"

Nothing, of course, is lovelier than a smile—provided it is spontaneous. But the admonition, "Smile now!" is death to spontaneity.

Several of my most satisfying pictures were made in quick succession from the time a five-year-old's lips began to turn up in a smile until the time she threw back her head in a burst of merry laughter. Quite unconsciously, I was the cause of it all.

Upon finding that my lens was spotted, I made a horrible face. Then, as I bent to wipe off my lens, I spied the beginning of that smile. I shot fast and was well rewarded (when working with youngsters, I recommend an exposure of 1/100th or, better still, 1/250th of a second).

When there is no great big smile—and often there won't be—what is wrong with a wistful expression? One of the most appealing pictures in my collection shows a wistful little girl looking out a rain-spattered window.

We tend to ask children to enter our world instead of our entering theirs. But the best photographic results almost always are obtained if we take advantage of what a child has in mind. For instance, I may get my subject interested in a game of hide-and-seek and then catch him peeking out from behind a tree. I let children lead the way, and then I follow along.

Also, the most interesting and varied pictures will result from photographing in all kinds of weather, taking advantage of all the seasons—as I did one April day last spring when I photographed two small children splashing in a puddle in a muddy lane (see photo at top left).

One of the tricks I use with toddlers—even when shooting portraits—is to put them in the family car. They almost never fail to grab the wheel like Daddy, and soon they're shouting with delight. I stand on the other side of the car and focus on their exuberance through an open window.

I never photograph in a direct light. Invariably, it causes children, not adept at tilting their heads to avoid the glare, to squint or scowl. I shade my lens and photograph them with the sun behind them so that it lights their soft hair. Or I take them in the shade if it's a particularly bright day.

My favorite photograph is the one I took of my daughter Cindy at her first-birthday party. Cindy, standing in her chair, is bent forward, waving her arms and yelling boisterously (see bottom right). Her dress is spotted and rumpled, crumbs of cake are about her mouth, and her place at the table is decidedly the worse for wear.

Such pictures are the ones we're likely to treasure most. But set about to take such a crazy, offbeat picture, and you get nowhere. The secret is: keep alert, with your camera timed for quick action, and you'll be rewarded with such wonderful pictures as a baby with his fist in the ice cream, or boys and girls having a not entirely friendly tug-of-war over some toy.

Gentle patience and a philosophical attitude are essential equipment in child photography. If Junior isn't in a mood to stand still in his Sunday finery, don't waste your time or your film. There will be another day.

Before I photograph a baby, I find out the time of day when he is most playful. Sometimes this is after his morning bath. Other times it follows a nap. Unless a baby is in a happy frame of mind, you get nothing.

For photographing infants, I cannot say enough for the close-up attachments which are now available. When you move in close, even an eight-week-old infant tends to respond with a happy expression or a smile (top right).

I photograph babies in daylight at a window so they will keep their eyes open. The new, faster color and black-and-white film both produce fine results in such light, even on a pale winter day.

POSSIBLY THE MOST DIFFICULT subject is a group of any kind. Togetherness on film presents problems. Yet there are times when a group picture is desirable as a souvenir of a family gathering or other special occasion.

When taking group pictures, it is wise not to line up your subjects as if they were about to be executed. Also, it is better if not everyone faces the camera head-on. Arrange for two or three persons to be talking to one another even though, as a result, they present only profiles. Or have someone reach down to play with a child or a dog. In this way, you will avoid a woodenlike group or, worse, rows of forced, self-conscious smiles.

Never, never be frugal with film. To get pictures of which you can be proud, be prepared to make eight to 10 exposures—and to throw seven of them away.

My number-one rule for beginners is: don't discard that information sheet which comes wrapped around the film; study it. Manufacturers naturally want us to be pleased with the results from their product, so they go to enormous trouble and expense to advise us simply and well.

My number-one rule for experienced photographers is: experiment with the new things on the market while keeping in mind the results you got before. Many of the new things are too wonderful to be ignored.

There is nothing, I think, more rewarding than photographing children, capturing them at different ages, in different phases of growth and personality development. It has been said that shoemakers' children go unshod. But in our family, photographers' children do not go unphotographed. We have albums for each of our children—and we count them priceless.

HOPE COOKE— From American Coed to

She's the Maharani of Sikkim, a pretty 24-year-old Mayflower descendant whose Hope Cooke (above) dressed in the furs of an American heiress, then married a Maharajah (below, shown with eldest son) and, as part of adjusting to new life, donned Sikkimese garb (right).

HOPE COOKE is not an "average American girl." Her ancestors came over on the Mayflower; she was reared in the elegance of old-line wealth in Philadelphia, New York, and Seal Harbor, Me.; she speaks with a studied accent, neither British nor American.

And, only a few years after being a Yankee coed, she is now a Grand Queen—the Maharani of Sikkim, at age 24.

People like Hope Cooke Namgyal interest Americans, so I traveled 10,000 miles to talk to her. Her 40-year-old husband's realm covers 2,475 square miles of the remote Himalayas, including the third-highest mountain in the world, and is populated by 162,000 Buddhist and Hindu subjects.

The royal couple, served by 20 persons, lives in a 15-room palace in Gangtok, the capital. Since the Red Chinese invasion of the Indian border, India, which controls Sikkim's foreign affairs, has maintained a rigid "no entry" policy over the tiny monarchy. I learned this the hard way.

My 10,000-mile journey ended in Calcutta, where bureaucratic dillydallying, airplanes with leaking gas lines and bewildered crews, bad telephone connections, and, not incidentally, bloody Hindu-Moslem riots, stopped me from proceeding to Gangtok. Hope was soon to have her first child, so there was no further time to try to break through the curtain of frustrations.

Nevertheless, I did talk personally with her sister-in-law, the Maharajkumari, and had a lengthy phone conversation with Hope. After many mix-ups, I finally got a call through to Gangtok 2. There are only two phones in Sikkim. Gangtok 1 is the Maharajah's palace phone, and Gangtok 2 is "hers." Hope answered the phone herself.

I first asked her about the impending royal birth.

"I will go to a hotel in Calcutta for a couple of weeks and then enter a nursing home to wait for the baby," Hope told me. "But if I had my way, I would stay in Gangtok."

"And why don't you?"

"Because my husband insists," she replied. "We only have a three-bed hospital in Gangtok and no permanent doctor. But a lot of other women have their babies in Sikkim, and I feel the facilities are quite adequate. We could have sent for a doctor from Darjeeling. But my husband said I should go to Calcutta to have the baby. And what my husband says, goes."

Three weeks later, the Maharani gave birth to a son, third in line to the throne. The Maharajah beat the stork by just two hours upon his return from London, where he had visited his older sons, Tenzing, 12, and Wangchuk, 11, by a previous marriage to a Tibetan princess. They are first and second in line of succession. The Maharajah also has a daughter by his previous wife, who died in 1957.

The most amazing thing about the young Maharani is the ease with which she has adapted to her new way of life, from conforming to the dates set by the royal astrologers (her wedding was postponed twice) to her manner of dress according to Sikkimese custom.

The Maharajkumari, sister of the king, agrees that Hope is adjusting wonderfully to the role of queen. I met the Maharajkumari in a Calcutta hotel, expecting her to be reluctant to discuss her new sister-in-law. Instead, she spoke of her with warmth and respect.

"Hope is very well liked in Gangtok," she told me. "She had no problem at all in adjusting to her new environment or getting used to our customs. Frankly, I don't think many women would have found it that easy." She paused a moment. "At first there was some resentment about the marriage, but most of it has disappeared. People used to refer to Hope as 'the White Princess' and 'the White Queen.' Now the word 'white' is hardly ever used."

SHE ALSO ADDED A SIDE LIGHT on life in Sikkim. "My daughter doesn't think there is much going on in Gangtok, and I guess she's right," she smiled. "She can hardly wait to go back to England."

It was Hope's interest in Sikkimese history that led to her meeting the Crown Prince. She always had a crush on Central Asia and in 1959 toured India with some of her classmates from Sarah Lawrence College in Bronxville, N.Y. She met the Crown Prince at a party in Darjeeling.

Hope insists that she has been learning Bhotia and Nepali, the two local languages, "by osmosis and conversation," but decided that upon her return home from Calcutta, she would take lessons and do homework like any good student. She hopes to get some help from her stepsons when they come home from England. It would only be a fair exchange, Hope said, because last year, during their vacation, she helped them with their French and Latin.

Whether traveling or at home in Gangtok, Hope works hard at being a good wife. She has been busy redecorating her new home with a blend of Western and Sikkimese ideas. She installed a library of Western books and is now working on plans for a museum to house Sikkimese and international art. Hope is also writing a history of Sikkim.

In spite of her score of servants, Hope frequently answers the phone herself—an American habit she can't shake—and often gets up to serve drinks for her husband and guests. She herself never has anything stronger than tomato juice.

There can be no doubt as to Hope's adjustment to her new country and responsibilities. She has done this step by step, careful to tread lightly rather than appear ignorant or offensive. For instance, her husband—whose forebears have ruled the shangri-la kingdom for more than 300 years —is supposed to be a reincarnation of his uncle, a former maharajah and abbot of a monastery. When asked, the Maharajah will answer, "Aren't we all reincarnations of a sort?" But Hope avoids the subject by pointing out that she is still learning about his religion.

Hope's first-born is third in succession to the throne.

Hope is learning her role as she lives the part—with charm, sincerity, and a new-found sense of belonging. No wonder the people of Sikkim have taken the young American girl to their hearts as one of their own.
